Huntingdon Wilson, Esq.,
Washington, D. C.

My dear Mr. Wilson:-

We should welcome from you from time to time information, not necessarily to be published, but which in your judgment might serve as a proper basis for comment on important affairs of which you are specially cognizant.

Before expressing editorial opinions we would know the situation in its true bearings; we wish to be unusually well informed, and therefore more responsible in our utterances than newspapers that are not national in their scope and purposes. Should you be disposed to render this service on occasions selected by you, I am sure that it would prove of high public interest and value.

Sincerely and cordially yours,

John J. Spurgeon.

Executive Editor.
