The Department of Public Instruction was not, however, the only one that was having a good day. The General Assembly, meeting in the Senate Chamber, had passed a bill increasing the salaries of the teachers in the public schools, and the bill had been signed by the Governor. The Governor had also signed a bill providing for the establishment of a state university at the city of Columbia.

The President of the United States had recently returned from a trip to Europe, where he had received a warm welcome everywhere he went. He had been in Europe for several weeks, and had visited a number of countries, including France, Germany, and Russia. He had been received with great enthusiasm, and had been honored with many civic rights.

The President had also received a number of gifts, including a large number of books, which he had presented to the public libraries of the various cities he had visited. He had also received a number of letters, which he had read with great interest.

The President had also been in close touch with his cabinet, and had been kept informed of all the important events that had occurred during his absence. He had been pleased to hear that the country was doing well, and that the people were happy with the way things were going.
