By way of explanation.

Pamela and Gerald North are a pleasant young married couple living in Greenwich Village in their own quiet way. Gerald is a bit whimsical; Pamela is whimsical besides being a trifle rattlebrained. Outside of his publishing business, Gerry hasn't much to occupy his mind except Pam's brilliant actions, which is quite a job.

Gerald has just returned from a business trip to Philadelphia, to find their apartment empty. Evidently Pam has been delayed on her visit to her mother. He is visibly worried—about the other people who have to use the same road because he knows how Pam drives. She arrives shortly, however, having accomplished her usual tricks; she stopped at Clinton Edwards' to see how he made out with her lobster recipe, she got on the wrong road, skidded in the middle of the highway, and arrived home just as the last drop of gas disappeared from the tank. Louis Berex, Claire Brent, and Ben Wilson drop in to take them to a party, but they decline because it seems that someone has been in the apartment while they were gone. The guests leave and Pam opens the closet door to get some — and out falls the dead body of a strange man. There's the curtain, so let's get on with the play.
