Railroad Man
Saves Good Advice from Father
The Whole Story Told by
George W. Wilson

On Christmas Eve.

The last train of the day is to sail for Philadelphia. The last train of the night is its last trip for the year, and the passengers are all sad at the thought of being separated from home and friends. But the first train of the new year is going to bring the good news of a happy reunion.

Christmas Eve.

When the gate closed that night, Marion had a sense of loneliness. Her heart was heavy, and her eyes were filled with tears. She felt as if the world had deserted her. But her friends were there, and they were going to see her through the hard times.

An Omen

While walking in the park, she saw a reindeer. It was not a real one—it was a statue. But it was so lifelike that she thought it was real. She felt a sense of comfort in its presence. She thought of her husband, who was away fighting in the war. She knew that he would come home soon, and she was grateful for the hope it gave her.

A Mission Done

“Dear Mr. Wilson,”

She wrote a letter to her husband, telling him about the statue and the hope it gave her. She told him that she was strong, and that she would be patient. She told him that she loved him, and that she was waiting for him. She signed the letter with a smile, knowing that he would receive it soon.

The Answer

The letter was delivered the next day, and she received a letter in return. It was from her husband, and it said that he was on his way home. He told her not to worry, and that he would be there soon. She was overjoyed, and she knew that she had done the right thing by writing to him.

A Message of Comfort

The letter was a message of comfort to her, and she knew that it was a gift from above. She felt a sense of peace and contentment, knowing that her husband was coming home.

The Season

She was ready for the season, and she was looking forward to it. She knew that she would have a wonderful time with her family and friends, and she was grateful for the memories that would be made.

The railroad man's visit was a gift to her, and she knew that it was a message of comfort. She was grateful for the hope it gave her, and she knew that she would be patient. She would wait for him, and she would be strong.

The Finale

The season was coming to a close, and she knew that she would have a wonderful time with her family and friends. She was grateful for the memories that would be made, and she knew that she would be patient. She would wait for him, and she would be strong.

John H. Bausman is authorized to receive subscriptions for the Independent.

John H. Bausman was the founder and editor of The Independent, a weekly newspaper that served as a leading voice of the abolitionist movement in the United States during the 1800s. The newspaper played a significant role in the fight against slavery, advocating for the end of the transatlantic slave trade and the abolition of slavery in the United States. The Independent was particularly noted for its commitment to publishing anti-slavery messages, including news and editorials that emphasized the moral and humanitarian implications of slavery. The newspaper also provided moral and practical advice, and was a platform for discussions on politics and social issues of the time.
A Word of Warning

The wholesale livestock market at New York is a "dead market," although a few sales were made. Deputy marshals were stationed at the railroad stations and other places of business to keep the animals in the market. However, a few sales were made at the lower end of the market, and a few cattle were sold for a lower price.
