This is Ursinus—

The Life Science Building and other hidden facts about your campus

The Ursinus College Campus

For key to map, see page

On the cover: Nestled between Pfahler, Reimert, and Omwake Halls, and hidden from Route 422 by ancient trees, the Life Science Building, is one of the best kept secrets on Ursinus's 140-acre campus. The futuristic structure houses the Biology and Psychology Departments and even boasts its own greenhouse. If you are wondering how you could have missed such a large, imposing structure on your last trip to Collegeville, or if your last trip to Collegeville was on the day of your graduation, this issue is for you. The map on this page should bring you up to date on what's still standing and what has been constructed since you moved your mortarboard tassel from left to right. On page 4 we will tell you what is involved in maintaining the grounds and feeding the students here at Ursinus. On page 7, you can see what used to be and on page 8 we will take you halfway around the world to share in a cultural exchange. But first, and foremost, on page 3, President Richter will tell you why you ought to be an informed alumnus.

Why you ought to know

Dear Fellow Alumni:

During late summer, I was one of about twenty-five members of the faculty and staff who underwent training for a new freshman advising program, just starting for the class of 1986. In the process, we are trying to set some new patterns of advising that will better link personal interests with career directions and therefore with academic choices.

During the training program we did a bit of personal searching together. We found ourselves revealing remembrances of things past as we tried as a group to put ourselves into the shoes of the incoming freshmen in our attempts to advise them better.

For the handful of the twenty-five who—like me—were remembering a freshman experience not on a distant campus but on this one right here at hand, it was a particularly interesting if not poignant experience.

I for one was struck by contrasting impressions. Given the constants of human emotion and of the mission of Ursinus, I felt fairly sure that the uncertainties and doubts that I recalled from those distant days in Collegeville in 1949 would be pretty much like the uncertainties and doubts that my twelve freshman advisees would have on their first days. And yet, when I thought about the changed conditions of growing up between the late 1940s and the late 1970s and early 1980s, and realized the many changes, innovations and improvements that had occurred and had been made at Ursinus in the last thirty years, since I was a freshman, I could not help but wonder whether anything from such a past experience could be relevant to what the class of '86 would experience this fall.

Time should tell which of these contrasting impressions was more on the mark. Either way, there is no doubt that Ursinus as a place has seen much change in the thirty-three-year span that my mind was trying to connect.

On the day of our opening freshman convocation, the parents of a freshman I had identified themselves as members of an Ursinus class of twenty or so years ago. "It's sure a different place," one said, calling attention to Wismer Hall, Myrin Library, Helfferich Hall, and other buildings that have appeared on campus since they were graduated. Indeed it is a different campus—without doubt, a better campus than it was for the student of more than a decade ago.

These alumni parents over the next four years undoubtedly will be making very personal comparisons between their student days on campus and those of their daughter.

They are of course in a minority of alumni. Most will not have had the personal excitement of living vicariously through an Ursinus student career a second time around—although we encourage as many alumni as possible to advise their sons and daughters to make application for admission to Ursinus. For the typical alumnus, Ursinus is of necessity a place that no longer has the campus or the faculty that they knew so well. To them Ursinus now is accessible mainly through occasional visits and printed information.

Like all private colleges, Ursinus depends upon informed alumni to advocate it among people who matter to the college opinion makers in communities, high school students with high academic potential, who should be encouraged to make application for admission, friends and neighbors who might support Ursinus either financially or in some other way. It is our hope that most graduates feel a commitment to nurture an understanding of Ursinus in their personal circle of influence.

Such a commitment is doubly important as Ursinus moves through a difficult decade for independent higher education. The difficulty arises not just from the peculiar economic pressures of this era. It also comes from the sharp and prolonged drop in the number of college-age men and women through the 1980s.

Ursinus is fortunately in a position of strength to deal with the 1980s. To maintain our strong position, we must turn to the alumni more than ever. Ursinus needs the informed voices of its thousands of graduates to assure that our distinctive qualities as a competitive undergraduate college of liberal arts and sciences are adequately known and appreciated.

We are thus seeking better ways to inform alumni about the state of the college and its special needs. One means is found in the factual report about the campus and its operation in this issue of the Bulletin. In addition, I have been discussing with alumni leaders and staff members a plan for meeting face-to-face with groups of interested alumni. The proposed meetings would take place in regions where newly intensified student recruiting efforts are being made by our Admissions Office.

Traditionally, most alumni have become involved with Ursinus by means of an annual gift and special gifts during capital campaigns. The need for that means of support certainly will not abate. But, in addition, we trust that increasing numbers of graduates will become better informed and more forceful advocates for the college.

The example has been set by a number of highly interested alumni who serve actively on the Alumni Association, the Board of Directors, and other agencies such as the Alumni Career Counseling Group. The college is grateful to all those now contributing so much time, energy and imagination. To multiply their number is now our objective. Respond to the call when it comes in your area. Better still, drop me a note right now and let me know that you want to become a more active Ursinus advocate. I'll get back to you with information and suggestions.

Sincerely,

Richard P. Richter, '53
President

The care and feeding of Ursinus College

At Homecoming this fall on October 16, the many tall trees on the Ursinus College campus will greet the returning alumni like old friends. Few of the thousands of people who enjoy that fall spectacle will notice the pruning and preening that was done on their behalf. In fact, most of the day-to-day operation of those involved in feeding and housing nearly 1,000 people is accomplished without much fanfare. Yet the one aspect about Ursinus most frequently mentioned by prospective students and most fondly remembered by alumni is the 140-acre greensward.

When the gold and red hues of Homecoming foliage have completed their annual show, the work of the college's grounds crew picks up—literally. Three full-time employees and three or four students in part-time work-study jobs take three weeks from their normal routine to gather up the leaves. A leaf blower, which acts like a giant vacuum cleaner, inhales the leaves and drops them in a trailer about half the size of a railroad car. Four times a day, the trailer is filled to the brim and then hauled to the edge of the campus, where the leaves are dumped into a compost pile behind Patterson Field. Leaves that hide in garden beds and around shrubbery must be tediously hand-ranked.

All told, the leaves when gathered would fill the ground floor of the average house. By the end of the winter, they have decayed into enough humus that, when mixed with topsoil, can reseed the lawns in preparation for Graduation and Alumni Day.

Leaves are only one of nature's taskmasters. When it snows, in Collegetown, a small battalion of employees is quickly mobilized to clear the campus for the 8 a.m. rush to class. Equipped with three 16 horsepower Cub Cadets, two 35 horsepower lowboy tractors, and an Army surplus truck, all with attached plows, the college's crew push the snow from campus roads, walkways, and parking lots.

A bagful of salt, hand sprinkled, can melt icy spots on a home's sidewalk and steps, but Ursinus needs a front-end loader to spread about thirty-five tons of salt across the campus in an average winter. Clearing enough space for the family car cannot compare with preparing 800 parking places for the College's commuting students, Evening School students and staff. Even with the plows and tractors, Ursinus's attractive Main Street housing leaves a number of paths and steps that must be hand shoveled, according to Fred Klee, '63, Ursinus's director of physical facilities.

Klee's crew is activated as early as 5 a.m. on a snowy morning. The campus security guard calls a supervisor after one-and-a-half to two inches of snow has fallen. The supervisor then calls in a four-member grounds crew to begin the clean-up. In the worst storms all fifteen permanent maintenance staff employees and eight student helpers are called on to deal with the white stuff. "During the snow storms, everyone helps out," Klee said, "Even the plumbers and carpenters pitch in."

The snow has barely melted before the grounds crew must prepare the spacious lawns and athletic fields for spring. While it takes a single man pushing a small spreader a few hours to fertilize his home's lawn, it takes about a week's time to spread three-and-a-half tons of fertilizer at Ursinus. The same front-end loader which distributed salt after the snows is now attached to a spreader to sprinkle regular lawn fertilizer with weed killer across a thirty-foot wide swath of lawn. Trampled areas must be reseeded and tractors prepare the athletic fields for the spring sports season.

Many homeowners complain about the few hours each week they must spend mowing their lawns. At Ursinus, three employees spend every workday of the spring and summer season retracing their path of the week before. One man works full-time mowing the lawns of the 22 dormitories which stretch from 409 to 944 Main Street that were all once private homes.

While the Victorian buildings that dot the campus provide a charming contrast to the

1 Corson Hall—1970

Administrative and faculty offices, named in honor of the late Philip L. Corson and his wife, Helen Payson Corson.

2 The Power Plant—1963

3 The College Union

Constructed as Alumni Memorial Hall in 1922, it originally housed the library. It was renovated and reopened as the College Union, a campus recreation area, in 1973.

4 Beardwood-Paisley-Stauffer Halls—1957

Dormitories for women, named for former Board members and benefactors of the college.

5 Wismer Hall—1965

Dining service, auditorium, classrooms, recreation areas. Named for the late Ralph F. Wismer, '05, former treasurer and Board member.

6 Bomberger Hall—1891

Named for the first president of Ursinus College, Dr. J. H. A. Bomberger. Made possible by the benefactions of Robert Patterson. Wagner tower was rebuilt in 1981 and named in honor of James E. Wagner, D.D., former vice president of the college. Classrooms, chapel, auditorium, lounges, music studio.

7 Myrin Library—1970

Over 150,000 volumes, audio-visual equipment, computer terminals, art gallery. Dedicated in memory of H. Alarik W. Myrin by his wife, the late Mabel Pew Myrin, a member of the Board.

8 Curtis-Wilkinson-Brodbeck Halls—1931 & 1966

Dormitories for men. Named for two esteemed benefactors of the college, Andrew R. Brodbeck and Cyrus H. K. Curtis, the twin buildings were connected by the construction of the middle section, erected in 1966 through the generosity of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Wilkinson.

9 Pfahler Hall of Science—1931

Chemistry, math and physics departments. Named in honor of George E. Pfahler, famed radiologist. The building is equipped with the Elihu Memorial Telescope for astronomical observation in the Walter W. Marstellar Memorial Observatory.

10 Life Science Building—1970

Biology and psychology departments with the Levi Jay Hammond Endowed Laboratory of Comparative Anatomy, the W. Wayne Babcock Endowed Laboratory of General Biology, and the Anna Heinly Schellhamer Endowed Laboratory.

11 Reimert Hall and Men's Residence Hall Complex—1968

Named for the late Dr. William D. Reimert, former president of the board of directors.

12 The D. L. Helfferich Hall of Health and Physical Education—1972

Named for the current chancellor and former president of the college. Houses the William Elliott Pool, named for a board member, neighbor and benefactor. The structure houses three basketball courts, locker rooms, dance studio, weight room, squash and handball courts, classrooms, and offices.

13 The Ritter Center for the Dramatic Arts—1980

Houses a 260-seat theater with flexible staging, a television studio, classrooms, and offices. Now named for Dr. Rolland A. Ritter and his wife Lullis M. Ritter, it was originally constructed in sections, completed in 1927 and named Thompson-Gay Gymnasium, in memory of Robert W. Thompson, '12, and George H. Gay, '13, noted Ursinus athletes, both of whom died in their senior year at the college.

Also note:

The Eger Gateway, constructed in 1925 across from 6th Avenue, erected through the generosity of George P. Eger. Fetterolf Hall, located across Main Street from the Bomberger walkway, is the oldest building on the campus. Built in three sections, the oldest dates to 1730. It houses dormitories for men and the art department. Another 18th century treasure, Isenberg Hall for men, a fieldstone structure west of the President's home, which is the westernmost building depicted on this map.

functional and forceful design of the structures that have been added in the last twenty-five years, the college must work hard to keep them in good condition. The maintenance crew coats the college's structures with more than 1,000 gallons of paint annually. Exteriors and commons rooms are painted by the college staff; dormitory rooms are painted by their student occupants. In the first week of the 1982-83 school year, 160 gallons of latex flat were distributed to the student Rembrandts.

As the students study for their midterms and then their finals, they are warmed and cooled by the Ursinus power plant, which was constructed in 1963. While the Main Street dormitories have their own heaters which use standard #2 home-heating oil, the central power plant heats all main campus buildings in the winter and air conditions some facilities in hot weather. This system consumes heavy, more inexpensive residual fuel oil which is so thick it has to be heated with burners just to pump it from the tank truck to the storage tank on campus. The power plant's dual conversion furnace also allows it to be fueled by natural gas. "That plant never shuts down," said Klee, who has been with Ursinus since 1970.

In April, the college added a computerized energy management system to increase operating efficiency. The system monitors demand and insures that automated equipment, like heaters and air conditioners, do not go on in peak use periods. The new computer guards against equipment failure and it has saved the college up to $1,000 a month on its utility bills. Double-glazed thermopane windows were also added to Reimert Hall this summer. The new windows will reduce heating costs and will provide improved security for the residents.

Normally minor household maintenance can become a significant task on a campus the size of a small town. For example, 350 cases of lightbulbs, each containing 48 fluorescent tubes, are purchased in a 12-month period. And, this year, Klee expects to replace 800 yards of carpeting in addition to the endless mending that takes more time than new installations, but saves more money for the college.

- 4½ tons of boiled ham
- 14,000 heads of lettuce
- 5¾ tons of ground beef
- 7 tons of top rounds
- 2,600 gallons of tomato sauce
- 10,000 gallons of milk
- 104,000 eggs

mitories, new security locks in Broadbeck, Curtis and Wilkinson dormitory for men, and additional insulation in many of the campus buildings—combines with unforeseen expenses such as replacement of oil heaters that take early retirement, breakage by students, and plumbing disasters to absorb nearly $70,000 of the college's operating budget in the 1981-82 year.

While Ursinus's maintenance staff concerns itself with creating a liveable environment by providing such basics as heat and light, the dining service must sustain the students in their daily routine.

In the academic year 1981-82, between 941 and 995 students poured through the doors of Wismer Hall each day. Many Ursinus alumni recollect meals served family style in Freeland Hall. Many remember jostling trays up the steps from the basement kitchen.

While Wismer Hall never suffered from Freeland's rather disjointed logistics, the M. W. Wood Enterprises, Allentown, the Ursinus College food service contractor for the last thirteen years, started serving dinner cafeteria style as an experiment four years ago to accommodate Ursinus's growing number of resident students. Now all meals are served in that style. Besides the fifteen to twenty percent savings in food wastage, the switch from family to cafeteria style has allowed the Wood staff to expand the menu from one entree at meals to the present two hot items, deli line, and salad bars at lunch; and three hot entrees and salad bars at dinner. All meals have unlimited seconds.

Despite the variety of entrees, it costs about $5.00 to feed an Ursinus student each day, a figure that includes preparation and cleanup. In addition, students can now schedule their mealtimes over a longer serving period making it possible for classes to span the traditional 12-1 o'clock lunch hour and for sports activities to last beyond a rigid dinner hour.

The present dining hall in Wismer was originally designed to accommodate 600 students when the building was constructed in 1965. The new cafeteria system enables nearly 1,000 students to dine comfortably.

Ed Barnes, food service director, runs the dining hall assisted by 23 full-time employees and 220 part-time student workers. These students are employed in a wide variety of positions including line serving, dishwashing, waiting, and cook's helpers, as well as, supervisory positions. Not only are the students earning money to help pay for their tuition, but they are also gaining valuable work experience.

The massive student crew serves the college students and faculty and is also called upon to serve the many community groups that use our facilities, such as, the Boy Scouts, Business and Professional Women Club, local school athletic teams and alumni, who rent the facilities for meetings and banquets.

To feed his clientele, Barnes keeps an estimated $16,000 worth of food items on hand during any given week. This food is purchased for the college by M. W. Wood at a considerable discount. (Wood buys a billion gallons of milk for its many South-eastern Pennsylvania and New Jersey locations.)

There is even an on-campus bakery to supply rolls, fresh baked breads, cakes, pies and enough other desserts to satisfy anyone's sweet tooth.

To whet the appetites of the students, the dining service starts out the school year with a Labor Day cookout on the front lawn, consisting of an old-fashioned barbecue of hamburgers, hot dogs, corn on the cob, potato salad, cole slaw, and watermelon. Every month Wood has a minimum of three "monotony breakers", ranging from mountains of hors d'oeuvres and vegetable dips to steak dinners for the entire campus.

Day in, day out, Barnes, who describes himself, as "an Ursinus student's surrogate mother for nine months," positions himself at the end of the serving line to talk with his customers and hear what they've done all day.

Sounds just like home.

Ellen R. Schwartz, Reading, formerly a reporter at the Reading Eagle, was graduated from the Pennsylvania State University School of Journalism with a bachelor of arts degree in journalism. She is on special assignment at the College Communications Office at Ursinus.

Gone but not forgotten

While Ursinus cherishes the antiquity of its historic structures, a few had to be sacrificed in the pursuit of progress. Some, like Freeland, Derr and Stine Halls (left), razed in 1969 to make way for Myrn Library, could not be renovated to meet modern safety codes. The original Olevian Hall (upper left) a women's dormitory once located on the current site of Pfahler Hall, was so well constructed it had to be burned down because the corner joints could not be pried apart.

Until 1966, the power plant (bottom) stood behind Bomberger Hall where the bookstore is now. It utilized two coal-fired boilers to heat the main campus buildings. One corner of the structure housed the campus post office. Its proximity to the then "back driveway" made it a natural meeting place for carpools. The adjacent water tower was torn down in 1937, when the Borough of Collegetown provided municipal water service to the campus.

Many campus buildings were saved from destruction through imaginative renovation. The Thompson-Gay Gymnasium, made obsolete by Helferich Hall, was gutted and reopened as the Ritter Center for the Dramatic Arts in 1980. The photo above shows the original field house, erected in 1907. The structure was incorporated into T-G gym when it was constructed in 1927 and served as a locker room. As part of Ritter Center, it is used as a costume and dressing room.

The Alumni Memorial Library became the much needed College Union in 1973. Sprinkle Hall, now the infirmary, was once the home of the college's farm manager. The barn of that farm was located on the site of the new power plant. The hockey field, Wismer Hall, and the Beardwood-Paisley-Stauffer complex now grace the once open fields where the college grew produce in season and harvested feed for its herd of Holstein cattle, which provided all of the milk for yesteryear's students.

While this issue of the Bulletin focuses on the Ursinus campus, the college has some exciting news from halfway around the world.

Early this summer, Ursinus marked the tenth consecutive year for its Japanese Studies Program when nine of its own students traveled to Japan for the first time. The new interdisciplinary course began with three weeks of classroom instruction at Tohoku Gakuin University in Sendai, Japan, Ursinus's sister institution. The nine students and their guides, Drs. Eugene and Jessie Miller, then spent two weeks touring Japan, including homestay visits with Japanese families.

President and Mrs. Richter also traveled to Japan in June, meeting with both the Ursinus students traveling there and the Japanese faculty preparing for their trip to Collegeville. The president recounts the events and evaluations of that expedition in a paper entitled Green Tea and Toyotas. Copies of the President's article are available by writing the College Communications Office, Ursinus College, Collegeville, PA 19426.

In July, Ursinus once again hosted summer visitors from Tohoku Gakuin. Forty students and three faculty members from that university participated in the tenth annual American Studies Program. Ross Doughty, chairman of the history department at Ursinus, and Catherine C. Wilt, audiovisual librarian at the college, were the directors of this year's program. In addition to their classes and homestays, the Tohoku Gakuin visitors enjoyed tours of several Pennsylvania historical sites, a visit to the Pennsylvania Dutch country, and an outing to a Phillies baseball game. After leaving Collegeville, the Japanese visitors made stops in New York, Washington, Williamsburg, Atlanta, New Orleans, Grand Canyon National Park, Los Angeles, and San Francisco.

Clergy to meet on campus

On October 15, Ursinus will host a Clergy Assembly for Professional Development. The new program has been scheduled to replace the Annual Summer Assembly, which began in 1907, and will feature The Rev. Frederick H. Borsch, dean of the chapel at Princeton University. The all day conference for clergy and paraprofessional churchworkers will emphasize development in both theoretical and practical aspects of the ministry. The fee is $5 and includes luncheon, which will be served on campus. For more information, contact: Dr. Keith Hardman, Associate Professor of Philosophy and Religion, Ursinus College, Collegeville, PA 19426, telephone (215) 489-4111.

Founders' Day

Featuring William Rial, M.D., President of the American Medical Association.

Dancing on air

More than 500 people packed Bomberger Auditorium to see the South Moravian Choir, Dance, and Instrumental Company from Stuttgart, West Germany, when they performed at Ursinus on July 29. The 42 men and women of the troupe were guests of the college for ten days this summer as part of the Company's tour of the Eastern Seaboard.

During their stay, the group worked with the college's Pennsylvania German Studies Program, producing videotapes for future class use and developing a book about their American tour.

Forced to leave their homeland following WWII, the South Moravian Choir was formed in 1952 to preserve the 800-year-old Moravian traditions. Today, the Choir sings folksongs, madrigals, and new compositions written specifically for the group. The dance company, accompanied by stringed instruments, woodwinds, and brass, performs folk, Renaissance, and Baroque dances in native costumes.

May we inquire?

Work on Ursinus' new alumni directory is well under way. Soon all alumni will receive a brief questionnaire with a follow up request to be sent one month later. The prompt return of these questionnaires is essential so that the information in the directory will be current and complete. The completed questionnaires, as well as a list of all alumni who do not respond to either mailing, will be sent to the publisher for telephone follow up.

Alumni respondents will then be contacted directly by the Harris Publishing Company to verify information and to see whether they wish to purchase a directory. Those alumni whose current addresses are on file in Ursinus's Alumni Office who have not responded to the questionnaires and are not reached by phone by the Harris representatives will appear in the directory with the information provided by the college's available records.

Alumni will be listed alphabetically, geographically, and by class year. Each listing will contain name, class year, degree(s), residence address and phone number, and business or professional information when available.

If you have not received your questionnaire by November 1 or if you do not wish to be listed in the directory, please notify the college in writing at: The Alumni Office, Ursinus College, Collegeville, PA 19426.

Hoop it up

If you can't fill Daryl Dawkins' hightops with the 76ers, you're more than welcome to come try your stuff on the Ursinus home court when Warren Fry's Grizzly Hoopsters ('60-'77 alumni) take on Skip Werley's team ('78-'82) on Saturday, November 20 at 6 p.m.

This first alumni men's basketball game will, pardon the expression, kick off the current Bear's 1982-83 season as they face the Centaurs of Allentown. All alumni interested in playing should contact Mike Piotrowicz, '78, 987 Old Eagle School Road, Suite 706, Wayne, PA 19087, telephone (215) 293-1115, or call Ursinus Department of Athletics at (215) 489-4111, ext. 251.

Don't hibernate

The Grizzly Hoop Club, four-year-old auxiliary of the Bruins Club, wants to thank all the supporters of the basketball program at Ursinus. The alumni turnout at the Potsdam NCAA Division III playoff game held at Ursinus last year was tremendous. Any former players, alumni, or friends who are interested in receiving Coach Werley's newsletters, updates on Hoop Club activities can join the group by contacting Mike Brophy, '81, Hoop Club Secretary, 702 College Avenue, Haverford, PA 19041, Telephone (215) 649-2355.

Dr. Joyce Henry, Ursinus's director of communication arts, applies the final makeup touch to members of the South Moravian Dance Company before a taping. The group's director, Widmar Hader, and Dr. William T. Parsons, professor of history and director of Pennsylvania German Studies at Ursinus (far right) work on the narrative that will accompany the film for classroom use.

Faculty appointments for 113th year

Ursinus College officially opened its 113th academic year when classes began on Monday, August 30. More than 1100 men and women, including 284 freshmen, 40 transfer students, and 20 reentering students, are enrolled at the college this year. Nearly half of the women and more than one-third of the men in this year's freshmen class ranked in the top tenth of their high school graduating class.

Thirteen new faculty members and two new administrators also joined the college this fall, including:

Nicholas O. Berry, professor of political science and chairman of that department, was graduated with a Bachelor's degree in political science from Bethany College and a Master's degree and doctorate from the University of Pittsburgh.

Egon Borgman, associate professor of economics and business administration, previously served as marketing manager of International Operations at E. I. duPont de Nemours and Co., Inc. He holds a Bachelor of Science degree from Temple University and the Master of Business Administration degree from The Wharton School, University of Pennsylvania.

Bernard F. Lentz, associate professor of economics, was formerly assistant professor of economics at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University, and at the State University of New York at Albany. Lentz was awarded the Ph.D., Master of Philosophy, and Master of Arts degrees in economics at Yale University and the Bachelor of Arts degree in economics at Oberlin College.

Emily F. Reed, assistant professor of political science, previously taught at St. Joseph College in Connecticut and Western New England College. She received a Bachelor of Arts degree from Marquette University, a Master's degree in public administration from the University of Hartford, and a Ph.D. from the University of Massachusetts.

Mark S. Arena, lecturer in communication arts, was valedictorian of the 1979 graduating class at Ursinus College where he received the Bachelor of Arts degree in English. He also holds a Master's degree in English from the University of Pennsylvania, where he is currently a doctoral candidate.

David E. Bradbury Jr., lecturer in communication arts, who formerly taught at West Virginia University, Concord College, Bluefield State College, and Temple University, earned the Bachelor of Arts degree in Speech from Heidelberg College, the Master of Arts degree from the University of West Virginia, and is currently a Ph.D. candidate in communications at Temple University.

Hugh R. Clark, lecturer in East Asian history, was formerly a visiting assistant professor at Haverford College and served as coordinator of the Penn Summer Abroad at the University of Pennsylvania. Clark holds a Bachelor of Arts degree, a Master of Arts degree, and a Doctorate from the University of Pennsylvania.

Cindy L. Himes, lecturer in history, has taught at the University of Pennsylvania and Community College of Philadelphia. She holds a Bachelor's degree from Vassar College, a Master's degree from University of Pennsylvania where she is currently working on her Ph.D.

Steven Fox, lecturer of German, was a recipient of a Licence from the Université de Montpellier, France, a Bachelor's degree from St. Joseph's University, and a Master's degree from the University of Pennsylvania. He has taught Volkschule Vaterstetten in Germany and the University of Pennsylvania.

Read more about the faculty development program made possible by this grant in the Spring 1983 issue of the Ursinus College Bulletin.

Coming attractions

A grant from the Pennsylvania Humanities Council has enabled Ursinus to present "Myths and Realities in Latin America" this fall. Coordinated by Dr. Shirley Eaton, assistant professor of Romance languages at the college, the program consists of five outstanding Latin American Films, each one is introduced by a visiting expert, and followed by refreshments and a discussion period. For more information of the five films, which will be shown on September 23, October 7, October 14, November 4, and November 18, contact the College Communications Office, Ursinus College, Collegetown, PA 19426, telephone (215) 489-4111.

Want to listen?

If your group or organization is sponsoring a special event, you should know about Ursinus's new Speakers Bureau. Thirty-eight members of the college's faculty and administration offer speeches on more than 100 topics, including travel, business, job hunting, and many more. In addition, a number of music programs are available through the Bureau.

The Speakers Bureau is designed to share Ursinus's educational resources with the community. In fact, many of the speakers offer their services without charge. To get your free copy of the 1982-83 Speakers Bureau, contact The College Communications Office, Ursinus College, Collegetown, PA 19426.

Business wise

This fall marks the beginning of the 30th anniversary for the Evening School of Ursinus College. One of the oldest collegiate evening schools in this area, it achieved its largest enrollment ever, 880 students, this past year and expects an even stronger year during the 1982-83 academic calendar.

In addition to its degree oriented credit courses, the Evening School also offers several non-credit continuing courses. A management strategies program, developed in 1979, offers selected seminars and workshops to alumni and area business people each year, providing them with new skills and updating them in current management techniques.

Seminars to be offered this October and November include: Quality Circles, The Management Technique that made Japan an Industrial Leader; Basic Management Techniques for New and Prospective Managers; Developing Creativity: Techniques for Getting Extraordinary Ideas from Ordinary People; The Management of Imperfection: Incompetence, Disorganization, Inequity, Disloyalty, Etc.; Managerial Report Writing, Effective Public Speaking for Managers; and Stress Management. For more information please contact C. Joseph Nace or Linda L. Long at Ursinus College, The Evening School, Collegeville, PA 19426. Telephone (215) 489-4250.

News Notes

1926 The Rev. Chester Louis Brachman was honored at the commencement exercises at Lancaster Theological Seminary of the United Church of Christ. He received a special citation recognition on the 50th anniversary of his graduation from the seminary and for 50 years of service in the ministry. He served as pastor of Orangeville Reformed Church, St. Paul Church in Bethlehem and First Reformed Church in Pottsville, retiring in 1970. During his retirement, he has served as interim pastor in seven congregations of Penn West Conference. He received a second citation for his work at the annual meeting of the Penn West Conference at Johnstown in June. This year also marks the 50th anniversary of Rev. Brachman's marriage to the former Mary B. Reese.

Phebe Cornog Wieland and her husband, Donald, of Williamsport, PA, celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary in Anchorage, Alaska at the home of their son, Dr. Tryon S. Wieland. Also present were the Wieland's daughter, Phebe, her husband, and all six of the Wieland's grandchildren.

1927 The Rev. C. Eugene Blum retired in April as chaplain for the nine companies in the York City Fire Department, a post he held and "thoroughly enjoyed for more than 34 years." In addition to preaching for special fire department services and presiding at numerous banquets and ceremonies, Dr. Blum was, in fact, on call for second alarm fires. He had been minister of Trinity United Church of Christ in York from 1948 until his retirement in 1974.

1930 Florence O. Benjamin took a trip to China in the fall of 1981.

Margaret Johnson Guenther and the Rev. William A. Guenther celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary at the Rosemont Presbyterian Retirement Village on May 15, 1982.

Address Correction Requested

PARENTS: If this issue is addressed to your son or daughter who no longer maintains a permanent address at your home, kindly notify us of the new mailing address.

Any more like you back home?

How did you first hear about Ursinus? From a guidance counselor, a family friend, a high school friend? Most Ursinus alumni had some personal contact with the college before investigating the possibility of an Ursinus education for themselves.

Most alumni of the college are proud of their Ursinus degree—proud because Ursinus, even in the face of economic pressures and the declining pool of eighteen-year-olds, maintains its high admissions standards and continues to provide a high-quality, undergraduate education in the basic arts and sciences.

To insure that the healthy enrollment Ursinus currently enjoys continues in the decade ahead, a stepped-up program of student recruitment is being designed and implemented.

We hope the alumni will take a major part in this new recruiting effort and it all begins at home.

You can help the College by recommending it in person to young men and women who measure up to the same high academic standards you helped set. And when you talk with them, keep us informed. We're looking for more like you here at Ursinus.
