Next year she will teach Modern German literature and culture, which considers this an important course for German students, and will also be teaching a course for non-English majors.

Parking Problems

By RAE BLAKE

At least once a day the often-cited phrase, “you can’t please all of the people all of the time,” is true at the University of Pennsylvania. While one person feels that one parking space is a monstrosity, another person feels that it would be impossible to have a problem in such a place.

The “parking situation” is surely not unique to the student who now has the privilege to park in a convenient locale, there is no parking on the campus.

When asked why the changes in rules were made, Mr. Higgins stated that it was necessary to accommodate as many students as possible. He then went on to explain that the university had to accommodate as many students as possible. The department is also trying to attract more students and is trying to make more parking available.

Dr. Lloyd’s outside interests include doing research in her field and spending time with her children throughout the world. While she would like to go to Germany to study, she feels that her duties at Urisun make it impossible.

Lloyd is teaching German at the University of Pennsylvania, and is the author of Delta Phi Alpha. She is also a member of the Eta Kappa Kappa fraternity.

The University of Pennsylvania is a private, non-profit institution located in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. It is one of the leading universities in the United States, with a strong reputation for academic excellence and research.

Here and There

By DONALD WHITAKER
Recently the College Entrance Examination Board (CEE), which is responsible for administering the SAT exam, released data on the intended majors of college-bound high school seniors. The data revealed some interesting trends.

First, there was a decline in the number of students planning to major in the sciences. This is likely due to the current emphasis on STEM education, which has led to an increase in the number of students planning to major in fields such as engineering and computer science.

Second, there was a increase in the number of students planning to major in the humanities. This is likely due to the current emphasis on liberal arts education, which has led to an increase in the number of students planning to major in fields such as English and history.

The data also revealed that there was a increase in the number of students planning to major in fields such as business and social sciences.

Overall, the data showed that the future of college education is bright, with students planning to pursue a wide range of majors and fields of study.
