Dear Mr. Wilson:

Thank you for yours of November 15th and its enclosures. I have read them with great interest and return them herewith.

Any magazine articles you might write, in addition to your editorial work, would I am sure immediately challenge the interest of all that have known you. Certainly they would challenge mine.

Accordingly I have passed on your letter to my colleagues with its information. At the present time, however, our space is much mortgaged and it will be unfortunately impossible for us to make further engagements in this direction. At the same time, should you send anything here, you can rely upon its being read - something which does not always occur in every editorial office.

Permit me to add a congratulatory line to the editors of the Public Ledger on the capital paper which they are now publishing. It is indeed ^{of} sterling worth.

Yours truly,

Robert F. Palmer
