The Widow's Mite.

A woman entered the Temple, before the close of the service, and put a mite into the collection box.

"What is a mite?" is the question that might naturally suggest itself. We have heard of a "mite" that is worth a thousand dollars, but it is not the mite that the woman put in the collection box that we think of at the moment.

The smallest quantity of money is as precious as the largest. The smallest man is as great as the largest, because he is the least. The smallest thought is as great as the largest, because it is the first. The smallest idea is as great as the largest, because it is the first. The smallest action is as great as the largest, because it is the first.

The woman put a mite in the collection box, not for a mite, but for the sake of the mite. She put it in the collection box, not for the sake of the mite, but for the sake of the woman. She put it in the collection box, not for the sake of the woman, but for the sake of the woman. She put it in the collection box, not for the sake of the woman, but for the sake of the woman.

The woman put a mite in the collection box, not for a mite, but for the sake of the mite. She put it in the collection box, not for the sake of the mite, but for the sake of the woman. She put it in the collection box, not for the sake of the woman, but for the sake of the woman. She put it in the collection box, not for the sake of the woman, but for the sake of the woman.

The woman put a mite in the collection box, not for a mite, but for the sake of the mite. She put it in the collection box, not for the sake of the mite, but for the sake of the woman. She put it in the collection box, not for the sake of the woman, but for the sake of the woman. She put it in the collection box, not for the sake of the woman, but for the sake of the woman.

The woman put a mite in the collection box, not for a mite, but for the sake of the mite. She put it in the collection box, not for the sake of the mite, but for the sake of the woman. She put it in the collection box, not for the sake of the woman, but for the sake of the woman. She put it in the collection box, not for the sake of the woman, but for the sake of the woman.

The woman put a mite in the collection box, not for a mite, but for the sake of the mite. She put it in the collection box, not for the sake of the mite, but for the sake of the woman.
