Food For Thought Or?

The recent repeated barrages of flying food in Wismer have prompted curiosity on the part of some and animosity on the part of many others. The Weekly attempted to solicit comments; to print the minority of replies received would be somewhat unfair. However, the reasoning for such actions, as the justification of pent-up frustration created by conditions at Ursinus to the obvious displeasure at the taste of the food.

And yet although the interests are supported by these candid student opinions, there are other students who express extreme distaste at the behavior of their peers. Regardless of the need for Ursinus' regulations or its food service, the unknown victim who is hit by a hardbaked biscuit or a mushy piece of pie rightfully experiences feelings of both anger and injustice.

Moreover, these actions do not affect the true objects of student dissatisfaction but are referred to student employees in positions of responsibility at the dining hall.

The food fights obviously do not aid in the initiation of any programs of change at Ursinus. Therefore, the new regulation stating that any person seen throwing food will be subject to disciplinary action is warranted for the protection of uninovled dining hall inhabitants. This notice is equally essential to those who are accomplishing something through this method as the only result is the creation of a new basis for punitive action.

Carrers vs. Liberal Arts

By DON WHITAKER

At most schools across the nation, like Ursinus, students are worried about the cost of their education—will it get them a job? This pragmatic view toward education reflects a current employment crisis and recession, has fostered the development of a new type of scholastic pursuit, career-oriented studies. In essence, the philosophy behind career-oriented studies is to prepare the student with skills suitable to the marketplace.

This contrasts with the philosophy of liberal arts which seeks to prepare the individual for later life experiences through intellectual growth.

As a result of this dichotomy in the educational field, educators are arguing for balanced systems, and which is more effective. The large universities are gradually opting toward career-oriented studies, providing their pupils with trained counselors and professionals in their fields, off-campus learning experiences, and career planning. Those following this concept range from job-hungry students to President Richard Nixon, who has a closer relationship between the world of the campus and the world of work.

The liberal arts side of the argument is covered by many supporters of this old system. In the Harvard Educational Review, two critics blamed the current interest in career-related studies on corporations and our economic system, asserting that career studies are simply expanded vocational training.

Another critic fears that with career-oriented studies, there will be a corresponding loss of cultural aspects of education, there is no room for history and literature.

As liberal arts appears to be pursuing a middle-ground—there is emphasis on career-planning (pre-med and prelaw societies) but there are also the requirements in the humanities.

Mr. Bloom's Bloom Is Worth Repeating

By GEORGE WILSON

George Bloom's name wasn't mentioned by any of the dozen speakers at a Seminar on Energy and Jobs for Pennsylvania held last week. And he was, perhaps, a little disappointed.

It was unfortunate, because much that was said echoed warning that he and other speakers made on Sept. 25, 1974.

Mr. Bloom, chairman of the Pennsylvania Public Utility Commission, was addressing job-seekers. He said it was foolish to expect a return for 48 hours. Then he described the chaos that would result.

It was, he was subsequently buried by an avalanche of criticisms.

In the furor his basic point was lost. George Bloom, in urging the public to vital role of electricity in our economy and day-to-day life—has increased generating capacity to prevent a disastrous shortage of electric power in years ahead.

Last week, at the seminar sponsored jointly by the Pennsylvania Electric Association and the Federal Electric Utility Commissions, Mr. Bloom said essentially the same thing.

They are, after all, the people who are in the electric utility business and need the laws passed to make sure they can continue to do business.

One problem is that many people in this great generating plant say that what is really needed is new laws to make sure that utilities can continue to do their job.

The Ursinus Junior varsity team closed out its season last Saturday night against William and Mary Trade. They defeated William and Mary Trade and thus ended the season on an upbeat. By winning their last three games they finished with a 250 record.

Ursinus led at halftime in the William and Mary game by a score of 35-34. Then, with about ten minutes left in the game, big John Leffert got hot and shot really well inside. This enabled him to lead the Bears with 24 points. But, despite John’s excellent shooting and Tim Rod’s scoring (Todd finished with 22 points in his last two games) Tim Feldman kept fighting back. A technical foul called on Todd Kline enabled Williams to tie the game at 62. However the Bears took a five-point lead at 68-63 when John Leffert put in two free throws with little time remaining to see the game through.

By winning, the Ursinus Bears showed that they improved vastly since the season started. Among the players who have performed impressively since the semester break are John Leffert, Roy Schutt, and Ed Andresen. John averaged more than 17 points a game over the last six games and performed well on the offensive boards. Ed also made an important offensive contribution as he averaged over 16 points a game since semester break. However, he did not do enough on the defensive boards, which is the tallest at 5’10”.

The Ursinus men’s basketball team is 3-4 so far this season; they have a 5-4 record overall. They beat Editions 84-76, Temple 67-42, and F & M 76-62; they lost to U. of Delaware 86-78, La Salle 76-51 and Glassboro 83-68 during league play. John Stettner (Fr.) and Bruce Delleman (So.) are benefitting from the playing time they’re getting. Although we had only two players back for the basketball team, the Ursinus bench has been impressive. Our bench and played well, especially on the defensive boards.

This is a building year for the team. With only three seniors on the squad, next year’s team will be much stronger. John Stettner (Fr.) is the tallest at 5’10”. Also John has helped us win many of our games this year. He is just working back into shape after a torn knee ligament last year.

Coach Sue Stahl says, “If they play a mental game and keep think- ing, we can win games.”

The women’s team is 6-6 overall. They went to regions but lost to Stetson. In a consolation game against Nova College, they were beaten. There is a chance they will go to regions this year. Sue Stahl says, “It’s tough to tell, but it all depends on how other area teams do.”

The JV team is 2-3 so far this season. Update of season coverage next week.

Spring Fever

BY WARREN FRITZ

Would you believe we finally got a preview of spring weather last weekend when temperatures soared past 70 degrees? Of course, warm sunny weather goes great with sports like baseball.

Well, the way the month of February is flying by, it won’t be long till the Ursinus spring sports season begins. Although the schedules have been announced by the Athletics Department, the weather and March, practice begins very shortly.

Mr. Gurszynski’s fine track and field team is working hard in Philadelphia and the local area. We still have a few weeks before the track team opens up. There are still a few more weeks before the track team opens up.
