and I asked where I was and how I got there. The horseman said, 'You are going to the gulch where I was born. I left the stage coach and returned with the stage coach to the gulch where I was born.

Near the end of the second week after my illness, I began to recover. Up to that time I had been in bed with a great pain, but on this day, when I awoke, I found that my pain had gone. It was my joy and comfort to think that I was gradually recovering.

When I promised to be married, I did not realize the future. I was in love, and I was very happy. My father had given me permission to marry, and now I was free to choose my own destiny. But I had not yet made up my mind to marry. My only wish was to be with my husband, who was in the field, working on a farm.

The undying hate of that man followed him. He was a Burgess of some standing. Whenever he saw the Burgess, he ran to the corner and gave a kick at the Burgess's gate. The Burgess was not aware of the fact that he was being kicked, for he had turned his back on the gate.

The following week was a period of complete peace and tranquility. I was in bed, and the sun was shining through the window. I heard the sound of the rain falling on the roof, and I knew that it was raining outside. I was happy to think that I was recovering, and that I would soon be able to go out and enjoy the fresh air.

In the evening she disguised herself as a nurse, and went to the house to be nurse. She was found with a box of medicine, and was arrested.

The following plan might be adopted. A nurse or a midwife could be employed by a local committee to look after the children. They could be taken to a hospital or a nursery, where they would be given proper care and attention. The nurses could be trained by the local committee, and would be paid for their services. The committee could also arrange for the necessary medical supplies.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16, 1879.

Significant events of the present Congress are the bills still under consideration in the House. A new bill to re-establish the New York Court of Chancery will be introduced today. The bill differs from the old one in that it provides for the appointment of a new chancellor and for the establishment of a new court of appeals. The bill has the support of both major parties and is expected to pass.
