VOL. 5. TRAPPE, PA., THURSDAY, MAY 27, 1880. WHOLE NUMBER 259.

THE MOTHER.

THE GIRL’S WARNING.

The little village of San Pablo, which lies twenty miles distant from Madrid, is one of the most profane and profligate places in Spain. Among uncles, nephews, and cousins, there are few who are not full of wine, claret, or strong liquors, and who do not lead a life of complete debauchery.

At the time of which we write, the town was visited by a wretched creature who had been educated abroad, and had become a great swindler. She had been sentenced to death by the Spanish courts, and had escaped from prison, and had been living in Madrid, under the name of Mrs. Sanchez, making her living by手段.

The event was in the fall of the year, when the count was staying in Madrid, and was thus occupied, that he was not able to return to his home, and that he was obliged to remain there until the following spring.

The woman approached him, and offered to take him back with her to the interior of the country, where she had been educated, and where she had been a great swindler. He consented, and she took him back with her to the interior of the country, where she had been educated, and where she had been a great swindler.

The count was enabled to see more clearly that which was suspicion became a certainty. He thought, too, of the gipsy, who had been the means of preparing him for the adventure, and who had brought him to the surface again.

The count turned the key, and then by the count, and his mind became haughtier and more haughty. He sat down, and, leaning his head upon his hand, began to meditate and ponder the matter at hand.

The count was enabled to see more clearly that which was suspicion became a certainty. He thought, too, of the gipsy, who had been the means of preparing him for the adventure, and who had brought him to the surface again.
