I wonder what good things I can do with the money I have, and what I can do with the money I have not. I wonder if I can be worthwhile, if I can have a place in the world. I wonder if I can be happy, if I can find peace within myself.

The next day, when I got up to go to work, I saw a young man with a bright smile on his face. I asked him what he was doing, and he said, "I'm going to the store to buy some groceries."

"What do you need?" I asked.

"I need some bread, milk, and eggs," he replied.

"And some butter?"

"Yes, please."

I gave him the money he needed, and we talked for a while. He told me about his family and his plans for the future. He seemed so happy, so content. It made me wonder if I could ever feel that way.

As I walked back to my house, I thought about the young man's smile. It was a reminder of the potential for happiness in every moment. I realized that I had been so focused on my own problems, I had forgotten to see the beauty and goodness in the world around me.

I decided that I would try to be more aware of the kindness and generosity I see every day. Maybe I can help others like that young man, and make a positive impact on their lives. I'm going to try to do that, starting right now.

The end.

The end of the end.
