9-21-1882

Providence Independent, V. 8, Thursday, September 21, 1882, [Whole Number: 380]

Providence Independent

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.ursinus.edu/providence

Part of the American Politics Commons, Cultural History Commons, Social History Commons, and the United States History Commons

Click here to let us know how access to this document benefits you.

Recommended Citation

https://digitalcommons.ursinus.edu/providence/159

This Newspaper is brought to you for free and open access by the The Historical Society of Trappe, Collegeville, Perkiomen Valley at Digital Commons @ Ursinus College. It has been accepted for inclusion in Providence Independent Newspaper, 1875-1898 by an authorized administrator of Digital Commons @ Ursinus College. For more information, please contact aprock@ursinus.edu.
The Yellow Satin Dress

A very pretty girl said Mr. Murphy had come at last to take her marriage contract. As he had been called away with his horses, he was just now getting back into the office. Mrs. Murphy had already ordered two new dresses, one of which was a white satin, and the other a yellow one. Mrs. Murphy was very particular about her dresses, and she usually ordered them with the help of her tailor, Mr. Brown.

Mrs. Brown had been a dressmaker for many years, and she was well known in the town for her skill and attention to detail. She had a large shop in the center of the city, where she sewed dresses for both men and women. Mrs. Murphy had been a regular customer of hers for several years, and she always ordered her dresses with the utmost care and precision.

It was a beautiful day, and Mrs. Murphy was excited to see her new dress. She had chosen a yellow satin, which she thought would complement her complexion and make her look very elegant. Mrs. Murphy was a tall, slender woman with a graceful figure, and she always took great care to present herself in the best possible light.

When she arrived at the shop, Mrs. Brown was waiting for her. She had a smile on her face and was wearing a pair of white gloves. Mrs. Brown always wore gloves when she was working on a dress, as she believed it was more respectful and considerate towards the customer.

"Good morning, Mrs. Murphy," said Mrs. Brown. "I am so glad to see you. I just finished your new dress, and I think it will look wonderful on you."

Mrs. Murphy was pleased with the dress, and she thanked Mrs. Brown for her work. She asked Mrs. Brown if she could see her new dress immediately, and Mrs. Brown was happy to oblige.

Mrs. Murphy entered the shop and was greeted by the smell of warm cotton and freshly sewn fabric. She looked around the shop, admiring the various dresses on display. The walls were lined with dresses of all kinds, from simple cotton gowns to intricate satin dresses.

Mrs. Murphy picked up the dress and held it to her body. She looked at it from every angle, and she was pleased with how it looked on her. She asked Mrs. Brown if she could try it on, and Mrs. Brown was happy to help.

Mrs. Brown helped Mrs. Murphy put on the dress, and she adjusted it to fit perfectly. Mrs. Murphy was pleased with the way it looked, and she asked Mrs. Brown if she could wear it that day.

"Of course," said Mrs. Brown. "I think it will look wonderful on you."

Mrs. Murphy was happy with the dress, and she decided to try it on. She asked Mrs. Brown if she could take a picture, and Mrs. Brown was more than happy to oblige.

Mrs. Murphy took a picture of herself in the mirror, and she was pleased with the result. She asked Mrs. Brown if she could send the picture to her husband, and Mrs. Brown was happy to oblige.

Mrs. Murphy thanked Mrs. Brown for her work, and she left the shop with her new dress. She was pleased with the way it looked, and she was sure that it would make her husband happy.

Mrs. Brown was pleased with her customer, and she was happy to have helped her. She knew that Mrs. Murphy was a regular customer, and she always looked forward to working with her. She was happy to have helped her with her new dress, and she was sure that it would be a great success.

Mrs. Murphy was pleased with her new dress, and she was sure that it would make her husband happy. She was grateful to Mrs. Brown for her work, and she looked forward to wearing it on special occasions.

The next day, Mrs. Murphy wore her new dress to a formal event, and she was pleased with the way it looked. She was sure that it would make her husband happy, and she was grateful to Mrs. Brown for her work.

Mrs. Brown was pleased with her customer, and she was happy to have helped her. She knew that Mrs. Murphy was a regular customer, and she always looked forward to working with her. She was happy to have helped her with her new dress, and she was sure that it would be a great success.

Mrs. Murphy was pleased with her new dress, and she was sure that it would make her husband happy. She was grateful to Mrs. Brown for her work, and she looked forward to wearing it on special occasions.
President of these great United States is bad too.

The Edict of Fontainebleau.

As soon as it was known that the Edict of Fontainebleau was promulgated, the people of Europe were filled with consternation. The edict was a declaration of war against the Huguenots, and it was soon apparent that the French government was determined to crush the armed resistance of the Protestants.

The law was passed, and it was strictly enforced. The edict of 1562 declared that all Huguenots who had not submitted to the Catholic faith by the end of the year were to be banished from the kingdom. This was a clear indication that the government was determined to use force to suppress the Protestant movement.

The Edict of Fontainebleau was not only an attack on the Huguenots but also a symbol of the power of the Catholic Church in France. The edict was a clear demonstration of the government's commitment to using force to suppress any threat to its authority.

The Edict of Fontainebleau was signed by King Charles IX on May 23, 1562. It was a severe setback for the Huguenots, who were forced to flee to other countries in order to escape the persecution.

Even before the law was passed, the prospects for the Huguenots were grim. The Catholic Church had been fighting against the Protestants for centuries, and it was clear that the government was determined to use force to suppress any threat to its authority.

The Edict of Fontainebleau was a clear indication of the government's commitment to using force to suppress any threat to its authority. It was a symbol of the power of the Catholic Church in France, and it was a clear demonstration of the government's commitment to using force to suppress any threat to its authority.

The Edict of Fontainebleau was signed by King Charles IX on May 23, 1562. It was a severe setback for the Huguenots, who were forced to flee to other countries in order to escape the persecution.

The Edict of Fontainebleau was a clear indication of the government's commitment to using force to suppress any threat to its authority. It was a symbol of the power of the Catholic Church in France, and it was a clear demonstration of the government's commitment to using force to suppress any threat to its authority.

The Edict of Fontainebleau was signed by King Charles IX on May 23, 1562. It was a severe setback for the Huguenots, who were forced to flee to other countries in order to escape the persecution.

The Edict of Fontainebleau was a clear indication of the government's commitment to using force to suppress any threat to its authority. It was a symbol of the power of the Catholic Church in France, and it was a clear demonstration of the government's commitment to using force to suppress any threat to its authority.
Simplicity simplified,
Work can be seen at the yard, or the differenti...