THE DOCTOR'S SECOND WIFE.

BY BRADBURY BOROW, Esq.

Della had been suddenly visited by illness. She was given up to her physician. She had been ill for several weeks, and it was supposed that she had a case of diabetes. Every one was much alarmed, and her friends were all ready to take her to the hospital, but she insisted on being operated upon. They were all afraid of the operation, but she would have it done. She was operated upon, and the operation was successful. She was taken home from the hospital, and the operation was a success. She was very much improved, and her friends were all very happy.

The operation was performed by Dr. John Brown, who had been called to the case. He was a very able surgeon, and the operation was performed under the best of circumstances. The operation was a very successful one, and Della was taken home in a short time. She was very much improved, and her friends were all very happy.
