Mr. Martin had just come into the room.

"She'sthrop'smell," he said, "comes from the scent of the sheep."

"She has a backache, I suppose?"

"Yes," said Mr. Martin, "and she's also lost her appetite."

"Is she going to have a baby?"

"She might, but I don't think it's likely."

"What kind of a voice does she have?"

"She speaks in a soft, gentle voice."

"How long has she been like this?"

"Since she was a child."

"Is she in any pain?"

"No, she's just uncomfortable."

"I hope she gets better soon."

"I hope so too."

Mr. Martin walked over to the window and looked out.

"It's a beautiful day," he said. "I think we should go for a walk in the park."

"That sounds good," said Mrs. Martin. "I want to get some fresh air."

There are a number of new companies on the market that are expected to make fortunes. Many of these companies have big-name investors behind them, and they are using their resources to develop new products and technologies that could revolutionize their respective industries.

Companies such as Apple, Google, and Facebook have all become household names in recent years, and they have all seen significant growth and success. These companies are examples of how smaller companies can go on to become major players in their respective industries.

However, there are also some companies that are not as well known, but they are just as innovative and promising. These companies are often backed by venture capitalists or angel investors, who are willing to take a risk on the potential of these companies.

In addition to the investment potential, these companies also offer the opportunity for employees to work on exciting projects and contribute to the growth of the company. Many of these companies are also known for their strong culture and commitment to their employees, which can provide a rewarding work environment.

Overall, investing in companies that are expected to make fortunes can be a lucrative opportunity, but it is important to do your research and carefully consider the risks involved.
