The Engineer's Story.

Business brought me to the little town of D-----, among the New Hampshire hills, and there I found a man named March, who had been the brakeman of the D----- and Fairtown line for many years. He was a likable man, and I soon became friendly with him.

March was in D-----.

He had been on the railroad for many years, first as a messenger, then as a conductor, and for the last ten years as a fireman. He had a wife and two children. He ran from Concord to Fairtown, and for two hours, he was in D-----.

I settled myself on the rough bench at the foot of the station, and for wood and water. While we waited for the "down train," he fired for me then. Jim was as good a fireman as I ever had. He had a way of talking to the engine, as if he were the engineer himself. He would say, "You know, engineer, I want you to go slow, but don't stop." And the engine would go slowly, and not stop.

"Mr. March," said the conductor, "we are going to England." "Yes, I know," said March. "But I want you to go slow, but don't stop." And the engine did.

The Engineer's Story.

As I sat there, I thought of the old days, of the long drives through the snow, of the dark nights, and of the days of the steam engine. I thought of the engineer, the man who drives the train, and of the lives of hundreds in his hands, and one life that was precious to him.

"Yes," said March. "I want you to go slow, but don't stop." And the engine did.

I am not sure how long I sat there, but I think it was a long time. I heard the conductor's 'All aboard!' and the engine slowing up, spite of all I could do. I thought of the lives that were precious to March. I thought of the lives that were precious to me. I thought of the lives that were precious to the world. I thought of the lives that were precious to God.

"Yes," said March. "I want you to go slow, but don't stop." And the engine did.

PUBLIC SALE

FRESH COWS!!!

The sale of a few fine Charolais cows, under the direction of Mr. H. R. Hendrie, late of West Norriton, will be held at the bridge. This does not by any means indicate the end of the sale, as there are many more in the yard. The sale was arranged to be held in the above manner, as the owners desired the same without delay to be sold. The sale will continue very serious results may follow the sale.
