OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

By H. L. D., New York, Sept. 24, 1864.

The expectation of the day was realized, and the war had been quickly closed, after an episode of a few days of considerable excitement. The war had been long, the hardships of the campaign severe, and the expectation of the nation was that, if the war was to be continued, it should be brought to a close as quickly as possible.

The President's Proclamation of Peace.

The President's Proclamation of Peace, as published in the Saturday evening's issue of the New York Times, was the one which immediately followed the end of the war. It was a short and simple statement, but it expressed the wishes of the people of the United States, and it was a declaration of Peace, which was received with universal joy and acclamation.
