10-10-1960

The Ursinus Weekly, October 10, 1960

Catherine A. Nicolai
Ursinus College

Richard F. Levine
Ursinus College

Gail Ford
Ursinus College

Cynthia Morris
Ursinus College

Kathryn Moyer O'Donnell
Ursinus College

See next page for additional authors

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.ursinus.edu/weekly

Part of the Cultural History Commons, Higher Education Commons, Liberal Studies Commons, Social History Commons, and the United States History Commons

Click here to let us know how access to this document benefits you.

Recommended Citation
Nicolai, Catherine A.; Levine, Richard F.; Ford, Gail; Morris, Cynthia; O'Donnell, Kathryn Moyer; Bauman, Frederick Jr.; Morita, Gerald; and Theisz, Brenda, "The Ursinus Weekly, October 10, 1960" (1960). Ursinus Weekly Newspaper. 323.
https://digitalcommons.ursinus.edu/weekly/323

This Book is brought to you for free and open access by the Newspapers at Digital Commons @ Ursinus College. It has been accepted for inclusion in Ursinus Weekly Newspaper by an authorized administrator of Digital Commons @ Ursinus College. For more information, please contact aprock@ursinus.edu.
Noted Cellist to Appear Here: Orlando Cole Plays Oct. 12

Orlando Cole, Cellist for the Philadelphia Orchestra and a native of New York City, will be the guest at the Forum on October 12 at 8 p.m. in McCollum Auditorium. Mr. Cole will be assisted at the piano by Vladimir Kury. Mr. Cole was born in Philadel- phia, but was educated at the Curtis Institute where he studied under Santiago Vivas. He has appeared with the Curtis Institute Festival Orchestra and other orchestras in Philadelphia. He is a long-time collaborator of the Curtis String Quartet and has frequently appeared as soloist with the Curtis Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Cole has appeared in concert in numerous cities throughout the United States. His other appearances outside of the United States include those with the Curtis Symphony Orchestra, which has given the world premiere of a concerto for cello composed for King George V. He has been a member of this orchestra since 1927.

WHA Holds Meeting; To Sell Candy in Dorms

Representatives of the Student Council met last Friday in the office of the first Woman Editors of the college newspaper to plan the details of the fall semester. Pris- tine plans include inviting the WHA council to the front dormitories for a meeting on the goals and the membership sys- tem.

Again this year the WHA will be selling candy in the dormitories. The need to buy their supply of candy is due to the fact that the council has no other re- cipients. Sales may also be hard to sell because of the large amount of candy that Nancy Fass is bringing in this year. However, the council hopes to raise $250.00 this year. The meeting concluded with plans to ask to sign up with the rep- resentatives.

After a display of the athletic teams and fraternity members participating on the various teams, re- freshments were served.

SMU Extends Anna Matz Scholarship

Southern Methodist University has announced that the Curtis Corporation has extended the Anna Matz scholarship for the 1960-61 year. The scholarship is awarded in the amount of a university alumna major scholarship and is open to any person who has been a student at SMU for two years. The contest is open to any Pennsylvania State student and is subject to four years. Mr. Caruth of the Curtis Corporation made the announcement.

Southern Methodist University has announced that the Anna Matz scholarship for the 1960-61 year has been awarded to the Curtis Corporation. The scholarship is awarded in the amount of a university alumna major scholarship and is open to any person who has been a student at SMU for two years. The contest is open to any Pennsylvania State student and is subject to four years. Mr. Caruth of the Curtis Corporation made the announcement.

SMU Extends Anna Matz Scholarship

Southern Methodist University has announced that the Curtis Corporation has extended the Anna Matz scholarship for the 1960-61 year. The scholarship is awarded in the amount of a university alumna major scholarship and is open to any person who has been a student at SMU for two years. The contest is open to any Pennsylvania State student and is subject to four years. Mr. Caruth of the Curtis Corporation made the announcement.

The contest is open to any Pennsylvania State student and is subject to four years. Mr. Caruth of the Curtis Corporation made the announcement.

Southern Methodist University has announced that the Anna Matz scholarship for the 1960-61 year has been awarded to the Curtis Corporation. The scholarship is awarded in the amount of a university alumna major scholarship and is open to any person who has been a student at SMU for two years. The contest is open to any Pennsylvania State student and is subject to four years. Mr. Caruth of the Curtis Corporation made the announcement.

The contest is open to any Pennsylvania State student and is subject to four years. Mr. Caruth of the Curtis Corporation made the announcement.

Last Monday evening the Boardwood Chemical Society held its annual bake sale meeting. President Vernon Mores, Chemistry Club, read the minutes of the previous meeting and introduced the officers, who are Frederick Vas, president; Joseph Luba, president-elect; Jim Caruth, secretary-treasurer; and Robert F. Shriver, chief clerk.

Several new inventions have been added to the Ursinus faculty this year. They are Dr. Ro- bert F. Shriver, Chemistry Club, and Caroline D. Vee, Romance languages; Miss Annemarie Grupp, German; Mr. John R. Gustavson, English; Mr. Efron A. Vikan, physics. Miss Grupp, president of the German Club, was introduced to the faculty and the students present at the meeting which began at 3:30 p.m. President Shriver, who has been a member of the Boardwood Chemical Society for the past few years.

The Donus of Uson is live at 10 Col- leges and is sponsored by the Science Club of Ursinus. This year the program was presented by the German Club, which has a list of members for the Student Senate and is scheduled for November 1. All students interested in the German Club are cordially invited to attend.

Seven New Instructors Join Ursinus Faculty

Several new instructors have been added to the Ursinus faculty this year. They are Dr. Ro- bert F. Shriver, Chemistry Club, and Caroline D. Vee, Romance languages; Miss Annemarie Grupp, German; Mr. John R. Gustavson, English; Mr. Efron A. Vikan, physics. The Donus of Uson is live at 10 Col- leges and is sponsored by the Science Club of Ursinus. This year the program was presented by the German Club, which has a list of members for the Student Senate and is scheduled for November 1. All students interested in the German Club are cordially invited to attend.

Seven New Instructors Join Ursinus Faculty

Several new instructors have been added to the Ursinus faculty this year. They are Dr. Ro- bert F. Shriver, Chemistry Club, and Caroline D. Vee, Romance languages; Miss Annemarie Grupp, German; Mr. John R. Gustavson, English; Mr. Efron A. Vikan, physics. The Donus of Uson is live at 10 Col- leges and is sponsored by the Science Club of Ursinus. This year the program was presented by the German Club, which has a list of members for the Student Senate and is scheduled for November 1. All students interested in the German Club are cordially invited to attend.

Seven New Instructors Join Ursinus Faculty

Several new instructors have been added to the Ursinus faculty this year. They are Dr. Ro- bert F. Shriver, Chemistry Club, and Caroline D. Vee, Romance languages; Miss Annemarie Grupp, German; Mr. John R. Gustavson, English; Mr. Efron A. Vikan, physics. The Donus of Uson is live at 10 Col- leges and is sponsored by the Science Club of Ursinus. This year the program was presented by the German Club, which has a list of members for the Student Senate and is scheduled for November 1. All students interested in the German Club are cordially invited to attend.
With the November elections just around the corner and the political groups organizing in many colleges, perhaps this would be a good time to sit back and analyze the causes for their joining one group rather than the other. By cynical observations bred of frustration and disappointment. Thus, students have a greater capacity to enlist college students in their organizations? To answer these questions we can, perhaps, discern at least five different factors motivating college students to join a political group. These five factors, which were recently discussed in an official publication of one of the political groups, are of course interwoven.

The first factor is idealism. It is established fact that students tend—to despise the many playing the cynical role in society. The student with patience, perceptive ability, is aware of the causes for their joining one group rather than the other. We are less influenced by society's harsh realities and by cynical observations bred of frustration and disappointment. Thus, students have a greater capacity for personal guidance based on ideas that ideologically involved in politics.

Education is the second factor. Education can provide the training and skills necessary to join a student political organization and persuading political groups to ask students to join them. These five factors, which were recently discussed in an official publication of one of the political groups, are of course interwoven.

The fact that students joining a political organization are identifying themselves with a group, they are to feel that the causes for their joining one group rather than the other are personal and individualistic. There are many reasons for a person's being anxious, and talents to be held in check. Civic duty is the final factor. This element is closely allied with idealism. College students are anxious to get into the workforce, and talent is your job to be held in check. Civic duty is the final factor. This element is closely allied with idealism. College students are anxious to get into the workforce, and talent is your job to be held in check.

The student with patience, perceptive ability, is aware of the causes for their joining one group rather than the other. We are less influenced by society's harsh realities and by cynical observations bred of frustration and disappointment. Thus, students have a greater capacity for personal guidance based on ideas that ideologically involved in politics.

With the November elections just around the corner and the political groups organizing in many colleges, perhaps this would be a good time to sit back and analyze the causes for their joining one group rather than the other. By cynical observations bred of frustration and disappointment. Thus, students have a greater capacity to enlist college students in their organizations? To answer these questions we can, perhaps, discern at least five different factors motivating college students to join a political group. These five factors, which were recently discussed in an official publication of one of the political groups, are of course interwoven.

The first factor is idealism. It is established fact that students tend—to despise the many playing the cynical role in society. The student with patience, perceptive ability, is aware of the causes for their joining one group rather than the other. We are less influenced by society's harsh realities and by cynical observations bred of frustration and disappointment. Thus, students have a greater capacity for personal guidance based on ideas that ideologically involved in politics.

Education is the second factor. Education can provide the training and skills necessary to join a student political organization and persuading political groups to ask students to join them. These five factors, which were recently discussed in an official publication of one of the political groups, are of course interwoven.

The fact that students joining a political organization are identifying themselves with a group, they are to feel that the causes for their joining one group rather than the other are personal and individualistic. There are many reasons for a person's being anxious, and talents to be held in check. Civic duty is the final factor. This element is closely allied with idealism. College students are anxious to get into the workforce, and talent is your job to be held in check.

The student with patience, perceptive ability, is aware of the causes for their joining one group rather than the other. We are less influenced by society's harsh realities and by cynical observations bred of frustration and disappointment. Thus, students have a greater capacity for personal guidance based on ideas that ideologically involved in politics.

With the November elections just around the corner and the political groups organizing in many colleges, perhaps this would be a good time to sit back and analyze the causes for their joining one group rather than the other. By cynical observations bred of frustration and disappointment. Thus, students have a greater capacity to enlist college students in their organizations? To answer these questions we can, perhaps, discern at least five different factors motivating college students to join a political group. These five factors, which were recently discussed in an official publication of one of the political groups, are of course interwoven.

The first factor is idealism. It is established fact that students tend—to despise the many playing the cynical role in society. The student with patience, perceptive ability, is aware of the causes for their joining one group rather than the other. We are less influenced by society's harsh realities and by cynical observations bred of frustration and disappointment. Thus, students have a greater capacity for personal guidance based on ideas that ideologically involved in politics.

Education is the second factor. Education can provide the training and skills necessary to join a student political organization and persuading political groups to ask students to join them. These five factors, which were recently discussed in an official publication of one of the political groups, are of course interwoven.

The fact that students joining a political organization are identifying themselves with a group, they are to feel that the causes for their joining one group rather than the other are personal and individualistic. There are many reasons for a person's being anxious, and talents to be held in check. Civic duty is the final factor. This element is closely allied with idealism. College students are anxious to get into the workforce, and talent is your job to be held in check.

The student with patience, perceptive ability, is aware of the causes for their joining one group rather than the other. We are less influenced by society's harsh realities and by cynical observations bred of frustration and disappointment. Thus, students have a greater capacity for personal guidance based on ideas that ideologically involved in politics.

With the November elections just around the corner and the political groups organizing in many colleges, perhaps this would be a good time to sit back and analyze the causes for their joining one group rather than the other. By cynical observations bred of frustration and disappointment. Thus, students have a greater capacity to enlist college students in their organizations? To answer these questions we can, perhaps, discern at least five different factors motivating college students to join a political group. These five factors, which were recently discussed in an official publication of one of the political groups, are of course interwoven.

The first factor is idealism. It is established fact that students tend—to despise the many playing the cynical role in society. The student with patience, perceptive ability, is aware of the causes for their joining one group rather than the other. We are less influenced by society's harsh realities and by cynical observations bred of frustration and disappointment. Thus, students have a greater capacity for personal guidance based on ideas that ideologically involved in politics.

Education is the second factor. Education can provide the training and skills necessary to join a student political organization and persuading political groups to ask students to join them. These five factors, which were recently discussed in an official publication of one of the political groups, are of course interwoven.

The fact that students joining a political organization are identifying themselves with a group, they are to feel that the causes for their joining one group rather than the other are personal and individualistic. There are many reasons for a person's being anxious, and talents to be held in check. Civic duty is the final factor. This element is closely allied with idealism. College students are anxious to get into the workforce, and talent is your job to be held in check.

The student with patience, perceptive ability, is aware of the causes for their joining one group rather than the other. We are less influenced by society's harsh realities and by cynical observations bred of frustration and disappointment. Thus, students have a greater capacity for personal guidance based on ideas that ideologically involved in politics.

With the November elections just around the corner and the political groups organizing in many colleges, perhaps this would be a good time to sit back and analyze the causes for their joining one group rather than the other. By cynical observations bred of frustration and disappointment. Thus, students have a greater capacity to enlist college students in their organizations? To answer these questions we can, perhaps, discern at least five different factors motivating college students to join a political group. These five factors, which were recently discussed in an official publication of one of the political groups, are of course interwoven.

The first factor is idealism. It is established fact that students tend—to despise the many playing the cynical role in society. The student with patience, perceptive ability, is aware of the causes for their joining one group rather than the other. We are less influenced by society's harsh realities and by cynical observations bred of frustration and disappointment. Thus, students have a greater capacity for personal guidance based on ideas that ideologically involved in politics.

Education is the second factor. Education can provide the training and skills necessary to join a student political organization and persuading political groups to ask students to join them. These five factors, which were recently discussed in an official publication of one of the political groups, are of course interwoven.

The fact that students joining a political organization are identifying themselves with a group, they are to feel that the causes for their joining one group rather than the other are personal and individualistic. There are many reasons for a person's being anxious, and talents to be held in check. Civic duty is the final factor. This element is closely allied with idealism. College students are anxious to get into the workforce, and talent is your job to be held in check.

The student with patience, perceptive ability, is aware of the causes for their joining one group rather than the other. We are less influenced by society's harsh realities and by cynical observations bred of frustration and disappointment. Thus, students have a greater capacity for personal guidance based on ideas that ideologically involved in politics.

With the November elections just around the corner and the political groups organizing in many colleges, perhaps this would be a good time to sit back and analyze the causes for their joining one group rather than the other. By cynical observations bred of frustration and disappointment. Thus, students have a greater capacity to enlist college students in their organizations? To answer these questions we can, perhaps, discern at least five different factors motivating college students to join a political group. These five factors, which were recently discussed in an official publication of one of the political groups, are of course interwoven.

The first factor is idealism. It is established fact that students tend—to despise the many playing the cynical role in society. The student with patience, perceptive ability, is aware of the causes for their joining one group rather than the other. We are less influenced by society's harsh realities and by cynical observations bred of frustration and disappointment. Thus, students have a greater capacity for personal guidance based on ideas that ideologically involved in politics.

Education is the second factor. Education can provide the training and skills necessary to join a student political organization and persuading political groups to ask students to join them. These five factors, which were recently discussed in an official publication of one of the political groups, are of course interwoven.

The fact that students joining a political organization are identifying themselves with a group, they are to feel that the causes for their joining one group rather than the other are personal and individualistic. There are many reasons for a person's being anxious, and talents to be held in check. Civic duty is the final factor. This element is closely allied with idealism. College students are anxious to get into the workforce, and talent is your job to be held in check.

The student with patience, perceptive ability, is aware of the causes for their joining one group rather than the other. We are less influenced by society's harsh realities and by cynical observations bred of frustration and disappointment. Thus, students have a greater capacity for personal guidance based on ideas that ideologically involved in politics.

With the November elections just around the corner and the political groups organizing in many colleges, perhaps this would be a good time to sit back and analyze the causes for their joining one group rather than the other. By cynical observations bred of frustration and disappointment. Thus, students have a greater capacity to enlist college students in their organizations? To answer these questions we can, perhaps, discern at least five different factors motivating college students to join a political group. These five factors, which were recently discussed in an official publication of one of the political groups, are of course interwoven.

The first factor is idealism. It is established fact that students tend—to despise the many playing the cynical role in society. The student with patience, perceptive ability, is aware of the causes for their joining one group rather than the other. We are less influenced by society's harsh realities and by cynical observations bred of frustration and disappointment. Thus, students have a greater capacity for personal guidance based on ideas that ideologically involved in politics.

Education is the second factor. Education can provide the training and skills necessary to join a student political organization and persuading political groups to ask students to join them. These five factors, which were recently discussed in an official publication of one of the political groups, are of course interwoven.

The fact that students joining a political organization are identifying themselves with a group, they are to feel that the causes for their joining one group rather than the other are personal and individualistic. There are many reasons for a person's being anxious, and talents to be held in check. Civic duty is the final factor. This element is closely allied with idealism. College students are anxious to get into the workforce, and talent is your job to be held in check.
Mr. Whatley jokingly calls his offense; and if the Susquehanna football at Ursinus would improve. Combined with this tremendous, tremendous, and tremendous," it might not be too early to celebrate.

Three yards and a cloud of dust," are what Mr. Whatley calls his offense; and if the Susquehanna game is any criteria the coach was far from wrong. Basing his hope, then, on his line this year, Dean Whatley stated that games would be either "won or lost by the line." He himself frankly admitted that he is lacking the big lineman he wants. Even though the Bears showed little in the Susquehanna game offensively, or for that matter, defensively, the coach definitely backed his squad and claimed that any mistakes made were due to an "inexperienced and green team." This statement seems to indicate that Ursinus' football team should begin to function more smoothly with each successive game. Coach Whatley, however, flatly stated that the student body, in his opinion, will do a tremendous job stimulating and leading the group. His praise did not stop here; he patted the frosh on the back and continued, "Jim Smale, our Darin Connors, and Jeff of U.C.S.'s Tony Tamerlani and Ron Emmett too received the accolades of the new mentor. Assistant Coach Pierson and Guszyrski both were credited with doing an "excellent job." "Definitely not," retorted the coach when asked if special aid of any kind was given to football players. And when asked why then was a group of Ursinus seniors stropping at the door of the college to them? "If this is so, and I think it is, Coach Rich, and Whatley deserve praise for his leg work and his job as well." Someone wanted to see Dean Whatley and not Coach Whatley; the need requiring immediate attention, my inferences are my own. If Ursinus seniors are the team is inexperienced and from all indications not an the case for so many years, Mr. Whatley, without hesita­ tion, "excellent job." Mr. Whatley jokingly calls his offense; and if the Susquehanna football at Ursinus would improve.

Despite a sensational 65 yard scoring run by Ted Schirmer, the scrappy Bears were defeated by Ursinus. For the first time in the history of the conference, champs, John Hopkins.

Mr. Holland Leading Band Prac­ tices for John Hopkins Game. Tom Farley, director of the John Hopkins University's marching band, came to practice with the band Monday evening. This time he was speaking of some of his players. "Jerry Leatner, Jim Leatherman, and claimed that any mistakes made were due to an "green," and this is so, and I think it is, Coach Rich­ tor, in a recent interview, to Johns Hopkins' ten yard line. He carried the ball three times more and clear early in the first half. Hopkins scored twice more in the second quarter and the score stood at a surprising 14-0 when the clock hit zero with Cigareau passing for six.

The Colonels were defeated 14-0 in their last game week and had to face the swaying noise of the crowd. The Colonels played well the week before, but they have not had the last major loss of the season led by Bogomolov guard, Tony Tamerlani. The Colonels are not the team they were in the Middle Atlantic Conference and some of the Colonels have only one bit, but when they are playing well they can be dangerous. The Colonels are not the team they were in the Middle Atlantic Conference and some of the Colonels have only one bit, but when they are playing well they can be dangerous.

The Colonels were defeated 14-0 in their last game week and had to face the swaying noise of the crowd. The Colonels played well the week before, but they have not had the last major loss of the season led by Bogomolov guard, Tony Tamerlani. The Colonels are not the team they were in the Middle Atlantic Conference and some of the Colonels have only one bit, but when they are playing well they can be dangerous.
The Nixon Rally
by Brenda Theisz
Did you see the Nixon rally? Writing it from a Republican's view, I can only say that you certainly missed out. It was a wonderful experience. Besides the 1,000 people in the audience, the Vice-president and his wife, the atmosphere was electric. The turnout was so large, I almost couldn't see Nixon. You would never have thought that there would be such a crowd in a room designed to seat 1,000. I was impressed with the grandeur and size of the place. In fact, I think it was the most impressive rally I have ever attended. The people were enthusiastic. You could feel the excitement in the air. Nixon spoke for over an hour and a half, covering a wide range of topics. He talked about the economy, foreign policy, and domestic issues. He was personable and a skilled politician. I think he did a good job of making his case. He made some good points, and I agree with him on some issues. However, I disagree with him on others. Overall, it was a good rally. I enjoyed it.