Whitman Elected Governor

BY MARK LEISER

Christine Todd Whitman pulled what many considered to be a big upset on Election Day by defeating incumbent governor of New Jersey Jim Florio. Whitman beat Florio by taking 51% of the votes, to Florio's 49% (a margin of 30,000 votes). Whitman now becomes the first woman ever elected governor of New Jersey.

Whitman claims that she was not surprised the race was so close, or that she came away victorious. She said the voters did many things on Election Day, one of which was proving the pollsters wrong. "More than that," continued Whitman, "they really said they wanted a change and they were able to see through a lot of things that weren't necessarily relevant to their desires."

Whitman says she would get to work immediately on solving New Jersey's problems. "My first priorities for the state of New Jersey are creating jobs and lowering taxes. That's where my focus is going to be." Later, at a press conference, she said she would have her income-tax cut in effect by July 1, 1994.

The Governor-elect also feels that her victory shows the disapproval of the votes, to Florio's 67% of the vote) and also in Salem County (66% to Florio's 30%). Although she hasn't even taken office yet, and she still has to make some 3500 appointments to cabinet positions and other offices, some campaign workers are looking well into the future. One went even as far as saying, "if she governs the state well, she's Presidential material."

Hubbard presents "Shooting Back"

BY ERIKA COMYTON

On Tuesday, photojournalist Jim Hubbard presented his program, "Shooting Back," a multimedia film showing how the homeless children of Washington, D.C. view their lives through their own pictures in Olin Auditorium at Ursinus College.

In the early 1980's, Hubbard was sent to Washington, D.C. to cover political life during the Reagan Administration. This was when he became aware of the thousands of homeless people being ignored by the government and denied by President Reagan in that city alone. Hubbard gave up his photography career and job with United Press International (UPI), in order to educate the public about poverty in the United States.

Hubbard established The Shooting Back Media Program, an education and media center that teaches photography to the underprivileged children living in homeless shelters of Washington, D.C. The program is an attempt to provide alternatives to the violence, drugs, and chaos that many young people face daily. It also allows the children to express their feelings about the world around them. From this came the internationally-acclaimed exhibition, "Shooting Back."

The idea of "Shooting Back," according to Hubbard, is "to bring about the idea that the young people now transform society. (They) have to figure out how (they) can help make this world a better place, make this country a better place, and first and foremost, make (their) community a better place."

Hubbard hopes to teach the kids photography while at the same time build their self-esteem. Hubbard's book, American Refugees, is where he documents homelessness in the nation's capital. "My work has moved out of me and into a collective file; my art is now with the kids. They are now doing their own art, which I feel is a part of me," said Hubbard. Hubbard said that the children who take part in this program are very enthusiastic, and enjoy being creative. The kids are improving their own lives, and staying out of trouble. One participant, Shawn, used to sell crack cocaine on the streets. Now, whenever he feels lonely or depressed, he goes outside and takes pictures of the sky.

Hubbard said that various elements occur in the teaching process. The children love to do the work, they feel good about themselves, and it is a "joyous celebration." They are proud to see their pictures hanging on the wall for everyone to see.

Hubbard recently established a second center in Minneapolis, Minnesota, as a home for his Native American Youth Project. He plans to continue teaching kids, and encouraged more people to do the same. He feels that people need to stop thinking about the "me," and begin to think about others.

Psych Conference Held at U.C.

Fifty faculty members from 15 colleges and six high schools in Pennsylvania and Maryland attended a day-long conference on the "Psychology of Teaching" at Ursinus College on Friday, November 5. The purpose of the conference was to explore ways in which psychology students could take an increasingly active role in their education and to build a network of highly motivated college instructors who are dedicated to providing such active learning experiences.

Organized by Dr. Eileen England, assistant professor of psychology at Ursinus, the conference featured a keynote speech by Dr. Thane S. Pittman of Gettysburg College. He discussed "Intrinsic and Extrinsic Motivation Orientations: Implications of Motivational Research for Obtaining Student Involvement."

According to Dr. Catherine Chambliss, psychology department chairperson, the conference grew out of her department's concern with providing opportunities for Ursinus students to take an active part in their education. "All of our department faculty will be sharing ideas about what has worked for us and helped us to promote change and growth in our students," Chambliss said. "We'll also be looking for new ideas to help us to maintain our level of success."

The conference began with two discussion sessions, each moderated by an Ursinus psychology department faculty member. Dr. Bruce Rideout led the exploration of issues involved with using modern technologies in the classroom, and Dr. Kenneth Richardson directed the defining of

Novack Wins Award

BY HARLEY DAVID RUBIN

Dr. Frances Novack, professor of French at Ursinus College, received the Samuel Netzky and Adonna Kaplan Award at the 22nd annual meeting of Hillel of Greater Philadelphia at the National Museum of American Jewish History on Thursday, October 21. The award is given annually to "the individual or institution who has distinguished themselves in promoting Jewish life or Jewish values on the college campus."

Hillel is the national organization of Jewish students on campus. At Ursinus, Dr. Novack sees Hillel as offering an opportunity for students to "celebrate and explore students' Jewish identities." Hillel is, according to Novack, "the Jewish address on campus and provides a way to form a community in a small setting."

When asked how Jewish life on campus has changed over the past 15 years that she has been a faculty advisor, Novack said, "I think that we are now better recognized and accepted as one of the ethnic groups on campus. The increased openness and concentration on diversity has allowed us to contribute more of our culture to the larger campus community."

Recent examples of Jewish culture on campus include a performance by the Sephardic Jewish musical group "The Voice of the Turtle" and art exhibits featured in the Berman Museum of Art.

These exhibits have included "The City of David" exhibit of discoveries from the excavations of Jerusalem in Israel and "Voyages to Freedom: 500 Years of Jewish Life in Latin America."

As for the award itself, Novack said, "It is something special. It's a great honor for us as a campus community. Ursinus is one of 18 schools in Hillel of Greater

- There should be more about student life and less news about off-campus things. You can read a regular newspaper to find out about news around the country. Also, Fred Woll should do “Campus Minutes” for dirt and he should do a “How-To” column on how to be overbearing and how to annoy people.

Rob Teti - Junior

Campus Memo

BY RICHARD P. RICHTER
President of the College

VOLUNTEERS: The sixty sorority volunteers recognized this week for their help with the Ursinus Annual Fund phonathon deserve the special appreciation of the College. They reached almost 700 Ursinus alumni and raised a total of $3,568 from 140 pledge commitments.

Last year alumni and friends contributed $1.2 million to the Annual Fund. That represented about 5 percent of the total operating budget of the College. This year’s Annual Fund, which is shooting for $1.4 million, will be equally important to the financial welfare of the College’s operating budget.

The Annual Fund helps sustain scholarships, library acquisitions, laboratory equipment, salaries, and similar annual operating costs. In short, it adds a critically important extra amount to the funds available to make the College run from day to day.

Making an annual gift to Ursinus is a habit with thousands of Ursinus alumni. It is a habit worthy of your emulation in years to come.

PHILLIES PERSPECTIVE: Dr. Leo Sando was the Davis Visiting Professor of Judeo-Christian Values during the month of October. He met with students and faculty in a variety of settings and discussed pluralism in America, from the perspective of religious values.

When he returned to his home campus, the Florida State University at Tallahassee, he wrote an article about his experience for the Tallahassee newspaper. His article started with a celebration of Pennsylvania as “the mother of pluralism” under the original religious liberty of William Penn. However, the article made a sudden turn when Dr. Sando reported that his first lecture on our campus coincided with a Phillies-Braves playoff game. He then tied the Phillies to his theme of pluralism. He said the Phillies “are to baseball what Philadelphia and Pennsylvania as a whole were to colonial America. Unorthodox. Different. Inclusive.”

From his Florida perspective, the Blue Jays and Braves had more pedigrees and bigger salaries “but probably less fun.”

The Phillies, said Sando, “are anything but elitist. When admonished for his unathletic appearance, John Kruk spontaneously responded: ‘Lady, I’m no athlete. I’m a baseball player.’

Our visiting professor, who became a Phillies fan on the spot, ended his column with this accolade: ‘Didn’t the Phils add color and a bit of wilderness to the season’s climax? That’s the thing about diversity: it not only works, but it is more interesting.'

POW-turned-Artist Featured in Berman Exhibit

"New Wave" 1985. A sample from the Edward Lis exhibit which opens today in the Berman Museum of Art.

Artist Edward Lis once noted, "Art is the most marvelous companion for lonely days."

As a former prisoner of war, he can say this with considerable feeling. He believes strongly that learning to paint saved him from mental destruction throughout his five years in a German POW camp during World War II.

From Nov. 9 through Jan. 9, a wide variety of Lis' work will be displayed in a one-man exhibition at the Berman Museum of Art. Included are seascapes of the coast of Monhegan island, Maine, landscapes of the Pocono mountains, watercolors of flowers from his own garden, and portraits. All of these works were created between 1963 and 1992. The opening reception for the Edward Lis exhibit will be on Tuesday, Nov. 9, from 5-7 p.m.

Says Lisa Tremper Barnes, director of the Berman Museum, "Each fresh, blank canvas continues to present him with a challenge.

Lis, 78, was born in Eastern Poland where, as the son of a police officer, he became interested in art from watching his father paint. In the years that followed, an excellent high school art teacher encouraged him to do landscapes in watercolors.

When World War II broke out, Lis, then 24, became a second lieutenant in the Polish infantry. On Sept. 1, 1939, the Germans captured him near the Hungarian border during their blitzkrieg on Poland. As a POW, he discovered that six of Poland's finest artists were among those prisoners allowed to teach art courses. They schooled him in the materials and tools of painting, and turned him into a sensitive observer of his surroundings.

"The painting and what I learned from these great artists about people helped me keep my sanity," recalls Lis.

A prolific artist, he has painted some 500 portraits during his 60-year career.

Following his liberation in April 1945, he continued his formal art training in England at universities in Leicester and London, emigrating to the United States in 1951.

Since arriving in America, Lis has completed nearly 2,500 portraits, landscapes and seascapes in oil, watercolor, pencil and pastels. His portraits of August Zaleski, president of Poland during the war, John Cardinal Krol of Philadelphia and historic figures from the American Revolution have brought him considerable public recognition.

His work is distinctive; Lis believes an artist must learn to interpret the subject in his or her own individual way.

Lis has exhibited in scores of one-man shows in Pennsylvania and New Jersey. His paintings now hang in Universities, museums, clubs, and art centers.

He has also taught painting in the Delaware Valley for more than 40 years. He is admired as a creative teacher, declaring his profession as both difficult and wonderful. His students share his belief that good art can come from those with deep feeling and close observation of their own land and their own people.

Lis still thrives on his teachers' stern discipline, which taught devotion to work and the idea that life and art are one.

The Blenders - a review

BY AMY K. DAVENPORT
Of the Grizzly

The Blenders captivated an Ursinus audience last Thursday night in Wismer Lower Lounge. The four-member a capella group from Minneapolis demonstrated their incredible vocal and harmonizing talent during the performance.

The night began with a few of The Blenders' original songs from their current album, Totally Whipped. The songs ranged from the romantic "Last Kiss," to the comical "Accidental Lovers," the story of a couple brought together by a car crash.

The Blenders really shook things up when they took requests from the audience, performing their own renditions of "In the Still of the Night," "It's All Right," and "In Your Eyes," stunning the audience with their improvisational abilities.

The poets and romantics in the audience were swept off their feet when The Blenders set Robert Frost's famous "Stopping by a Wood on a Snowy Eve" to vocal accompaniment. The group also performed an array of songs from the popular list to showtunes, all of which fit to the beat of "Louie, Louie."

Overall, the show was fantastic and the audience responded with great enthusiasm.
Dear Anton,

There is a girl here that I am having a problem with. She is very arrogant and also annoying. She thinks she knows everything, has been through everything, and can do everything. She is like moss on a rock--she keeps coming around. When I see her, I cringe with embarrassment. She has an annoying voice and walk. She also thinks she's cute. I am trying to get along with her because I think that deep inside she is a good person; she is just so annoying. She is nice to everyone, including me. What do I do? How do I handle this nicely?

Dear Anton,

I'm having trouble with my boyfriend. He is in a frat. We never spend any time together. He is always playing video games with the boys. We never spend any time together except at night when he sometimes stops by. What can I do to get his attention and make him want to be with me?

-Sincerely yours,
Lonely

Dear Lonely,

You definitely have a problem on your hands. I suggest starting to hang out with your boyfriend and watch him play video games or to attract him with new lingerie. There is a possibility you could do both. I can help you edible underwear and refer to joystick in particular for reasons of taste. My apologies to Anton and all those reading for a cheap thrall. Use your imagination. Features Ed. You could also plan to do some special things with him (take him to a Flyers game for example). Just show him that you'll do some of his favorite things with him, and he will spend more time doing things you want to do. If none of this works, lose the bum and find someone who will treat you right.

Dear Observant young lady,

You should get out more often. Loosen up a little too. Don't you think you're being awfully judgmental?

From here we can begin helping ourselves by trying to be open, honest and willing to change. Some other important things to consider when dealing with codependency are to face what has happened to you in the past, look to yourself for approval, trust your feelings and realize you can depend on yourself, be patient with yourself and take one day at a time.

Dear Anton appreciates submissions from the student body. In future, please write letters in the form of a request for advice. Otherwise it will be treated with the same silly treatment that this letter received. However, this letter boggles the mind and could not be ignored. Is this the product of a liberal education? Beware: you could be unknowingly acquainted with this woman. She sounds dangerous. Please bring submissions to the third floor of Bomberger.

Never Discuss Politics or Religion at the Dinner Table

BY JAYSON BLOCKSIDE

"Never discuss politics or religion at the dinner table." Unsolicited fatherly advice from someone who, I find now, knows human nature better than I had ever imagined. This wisdom was handed down to me before I knew anything about politics. Religion was never a big thing in my household, so I usually refrain from entertaining others with my unsharpened opinions. However, I find it difficult now that I have an understanding greater than the ten year old who received that advice (my Rush-Limbaugh-fanatic friends may refute that assumption), to keep my conversations limited to "How's-the-weather?" "Boy is she HOT!" and "So, we gonna get smashed this weekend?" instead of probing deeper political and philosophical questions (corny, huh?). Even in college, amongst peers who should be (or should they be?) pondering important questions, I find a stubborn opposition at every turn. Given the rare occasion that the subject of politics is brought up at "the dinner table", it is almost always certain that the mashed potatoes and gravy go flying and occasionally someone gets stabbed with the silverware (not that I haven't brandished my own fork or launched a handful of baked beans on occasion).

Was my father right? Are politics and religion something reserved for the classroom or television debates, or do they belong in the household or dormitory as well? My experience has taught me to keep my mouth shut or expect the worst from people who fear their convictions are being challenged. Should people be challenged in this regard or is this considered blatant disrespect for their opinions? I have observed that most of my peers either try to avoid these discussions as a whole, or partake in them only if they belong to the clear majority. In this case, the lone dissenter (usually poor old me) becomes one of those rip apart NFL velcro referees. The feeling is not pleasant.

On the other hand, the lone dissenter, seeing that his arguments are received about as well as Roseanne Arnold's rendition of the National Anthem, explodes in his own fit of rage and disgust.

So, here we have your typical, as far as I've experienced, good old American discussion of politics, fists and spittle flying to high heaven. Can you imagine those who must do this for a living?

What should people concern themselves with besides the mundane daily worries of life? Of course, we should cultivate relationships, friendships, and familial bonds. We should also have as much fun as our young bodies can handle (here at Ursinus we age quick). I think that we should also give much thought to the "bigger issues" in life, like where we stand on issues of morality, race relations, sexual orientation, war, the death penalty, etc. Naturally, I wouldn't impose a moment of philosophic silence in the midst of our Reimert revelries, but I think that, if kept civil and fun, discussions of this sort can enrich relations and open our minds. I do not believe that any individual at our age, including myself (especially myself), should close ourselves to the opinions of others.

People are wrong in feeling it necessary to always draw conclusions. Beliefs, in a way, are horrible impediments to the truth because, since they serve primarily as self-security buffers, people will grab hold to any idea that will suit this selfish need.

125th Anniversary Edition

Captain Groot's 1898 Edition of the HUB all the week during lunch or dinner in Warner Lobby.
Preserve this 150 years memories and celebrate 125 years of Ursinus College.

IN DEFENSE OF GREEK LIFE, PART ONE

BY FRED WOLL
Of the Grizzly

Like Craig Faucher, I too was sitting in Wismer with my mouth hanging open and my mind racing. But it was not in reaction to some angry girl's story. Rather, it was in response to a Grizzly article entitled "Dr. Margot Kelley Burns My Bubble." As a member of the Ursinus Greek community, I felt that perhaps I could respond to some of the points that Dr. Kelley brought up. So what I have done is written an opinion on the way I feel. The first half will be in this week's edition, the second half will appear in next week's paper. Size constraints can be truly frustrating.

Let me first begin by saying that I know Dr. Kelley, and I believe we get along fairly well. Like Craig said, she is indeed educated and is not one to just "sit back and spout opinions." She also did not choose to submit the article. It must be understood that she was only interviewed for her opinion. In fact, the issue here is not with Dr. Kelley. The issue here is with some of the points she brought up, which I'd like to address.

I'd like to start with giving some of my own background, and why I feel that it may qualify me to speak on the subject of Greek life. I transferred from Lehigh University, after having spent 2 years there. Like Indiana University, it has an enormous Greek population. There are something in the realm of 32 fraternities and 10 sororities for an undergraduate population of around 4200 students. If I recall correctly, over 50% of the students there are involved in Greek life. Now granted, Lehigh is four times the size of Ursinus, but I do not believe the campus here is over half Greek. It may seem that way, because the school is so small. But I also believe that it seems that way because the Greeks here get involved in the Ursinus community.

Lehigh Greeks segregate themselves from the rest of the campus. They take all their meals in the fraternity house, with their own hired chefs. Even their living arrangements, the fraternity houses themselves, are separate from the rest of campus. They are all located on what is called "The Hill," suggesting an aloofness from the rest of campus. They seem to disdain affiliating themselves with the rest of the school.

In contrast, Ursinus Greeks and non-Greek students have an equal opportunity for housing. In fact, there are more non-Greeks in houses than Greeks. And there are no fraternity houses. Even Greeks suites in Reimert are no different then non-Greek suites, except for the fact that members of one fraternity or one sorority reside there. If a non-Greek wanted to get a suite for himself or herself and 7 friends, they are free to do so. In fact, from what I understand, any non-RA suite can have a party on a weekend, so long as it is registered in the Student Activities Office beforehand. They can even put out flyers at meals if they are approved by Wismer and Sue Kessler. And from what I understand from last week's "closet observer" column, Clamer House had a big party just last weekend. And everyone eats meals at Wismer, Greek or not. As to the Greeks seeming to have their own tables; aren't there also other groups of friends that sit together at meals? So what does this mean? It means that Greeks are not given any preferential treatment when it comes to living and socializing on campus.

The worst part of Lehigh Greek life was the fact that no one got along with anyone else. It seemed that as soon as anyone pledged one particular fraternity or sorority, then they hated anyone not in that particular organization. I saw it happen right before my eyes. Guys whom I was best friends with freshman year would not even deign themselves to admit to my presence, because I hung out with a different fraternity. There were fights every weekend, big gang fights between fraternities. And if you were in their house for some out of control party, God forbid you should even look at a brother the wrong way. The whole house would cave in on you. Security and ambulances were not all that uncommon on The Hill on weekends.

But here at Ursinus, I think everyone gets along a lot better. For example, I am a member of the Delta Pi Sigma fraternity. But I live in a house populated by members of fraternities, like Beta Sig. We all get along fine. And I enjoy hanging out with POD and breaking their stuff with them. I also have friends that are not in any fraternity. And I know that there are several guys that hang us that we all get along with, who chose not to pledge for their own reasons.

Next week, I'll address pledging, and why it is a positive experience.

dear editor...

Do you know those study cabinets on the second floor of Myrin that are supposedly for students (mainly seniors) doing honors research? Well, I'm currently a senior doing honors research in sociology, so you would think that I would be able to get one, right?

In a more perfect world, I'm sure that that would be true, but not here at Ursinus. And can you guess why? It is not because there are so many students doing honors work (they're about 20), it's because most of them are being used by faculty.

Faculty? Doesn't this seem a little odd to you - most faculty (if not all) have nice, comfy offices that they can work out of when they are on campus as well as (presumably) a home somewhere. As students, we have these cabinets and our dorm rooms which many of us share with a roommate.

If this is the faculty's idea of promoting student research, they need to think again. After carrying over 45 books back and forth to the library several times, I'm beginning to doubt whether or not it's worth all the hassle. Students - next time you see a faculty member ask them if they have a study cabinet in the library. If they do, please remind them that they have an office and that those cabinets are supposed to be for students.

Campus grows darker at dinner, a coat is no longer optional, and apples are a safe fruit option in Wismer. Three aspects of the transition we call autism here at Ursinus.

Has anyone noticed a change for the better in their sleeping lately? Besides getting extra sleep, the observer has enjoyed letting the window open at night to let his lungs ice down with fresh, crisp oxygen, while the remainder of his body is warmed by layer upon layer of comforter, blanket, and pajama. Some students, however, are noticing an inability to sleep as the semester paper crunch arrives. The observer will be thankful when the eighteenth of November passes...his calendar indicates that several important assignments are due on that particular Thursday.

He has been passing his procrastination in several different ways around campus. First of all, for those of you who have not discovered the new Apple lab on the third floor of Myrin, then get on up to discover the joys of CD-ROM. In the "three points for creativity" department, someone discovered that they could alter the "beep" function to insert their own voice advertising an upcoming event on November 12th in Helficher Hall.

Speaking of which, for those of you who don't already know, the campus is bracing for quite an event on Friday night. Live, a national band signed on a major label, will be at Ursinus performing hits like "Pain Lives on the Riversides" and "Operation Spirit." The event has been advertised on WDKR and will be attracting a large off-campus audience. Additionally, several sororities will be competing for the highest representation. The campus group Berni Beer will be opening for them, and admission is free to Ursinus students. Don't miss this one.

Thanksgiving break is only a few weeks away. The observer has learned that Santa will be riding a fire engine during the parade, and reminding us to send him our lists.

URSINUS HOSTS FIRST CENTENNIAL CONFERENCE SEMINAR

The "first of its kind" student-athlete leadership seminar

The Centennial Conference, in its first year as an all-sports conference, broke new ground on Wednesday, Nov. 3, by holding a conference-wide student-athlete leadership seminar. The seminar, believed to be the first of its kind, was organized by Centennial Conference Executive Secretary Steve Ulrich, Bryn Mawr College Athletic Director (and Ursinus alumnae) Jenepher Shillingford, Ursinus Director of Athletics Dr. Robert R. Davidson and Ursinus Associate Athletic Director Adele P. Boyd.

Hosted by Ursinus, the seminar provided student-athletes a forum to discuss current issues facing them and make recommendations to the Conference leadership. On field behavior, fan behavior, parent and alumni influences and attitudes of coaches and athletic administrators were among the topics addressed. Additionally, Shillingford spoke on developing a student-athlete advisory committee.

The keynote speaker was Dr. Joel Fish, sports psychologist for St. Joseph's University, who spoke on "Building team chemistry and team unity in the Centennial Conference."

Six student-athletes, three men and three women, from 10 of the 11 Centennial Conference colleges and universities attended the event. Bryn Mawr College, Dickinson College, Gettysburg College, Haverford College, Johns Hopkins University, Muhlenberg College, Swarthmore College, Ursinus College, Washington College, and Western Maryland College were all represented.

The student-athletes recommended that future seminars be scheduled on a regular basis.

QUESTIONS FOR UC TO THINK ABOUT

-Why isn't the weight room open in the mornings?
-When can students play basketball in the gyms? Can they use school balls if they don't have their own?
-Do guys go to aerobics? Can they? Can beginners step right in?
-Why don't we have Powder Puff Football or Women's Soccer?
-How long does Men's Lacrosse have to wait before becoming an official team?
-Why does soccer practice on the baseball outfield but play on another field?
-What's the REAL deal with the Helfferich Gym floors?
-Why does the football practice field have lights while the game field is in the dark?
-Why don't they play some football games at night (under lights, of course)?

Bears Kicked Late by Mules
Muhlenberg wins in fourth quarter with two touchdowns

BY TOM MASTRANGELO
Assistant Sports Editor

The Ursinus Bears travelled to Allentown on Saturday, Nov. 6 to take on the Muhlenberg Mules and came up on the short end of a 34-31 loss in Centennial Conference play.

UC got on the scoreboard early, as junior quarterback Brian Lafond (15-27 for 240 yards and 1 touchdown) connected with senior wideout Scott Sallach (5 receptions, 120 yards, 1 touchdown) on a 67-yard scoring pass that propelled the Bears to a 6-0 lead.

The Bears increased their lead to 12-0 after junior running back Tom Mastroangelo (33 rushes, 134 yards and 1 touchdown) scampered 5 yards for the score with little time remaining in the first quarter.

After Muhlenberg scored twice before the half to take a 15-12 lead, the Bears came out after halftime fired up for the third quarter.

Lafond scored a 4-yard quarterback sneak, and senior linebacker Paul Guenther scored on a 36-yard interception return to give the visiting Bears a 24-15 lead.

Muhlenberg then took possession and came right back with a score of their own to cut the Bears lead to 24-22. But on the ensuing kickoff, sophomore John Scorsone returned the ball 78 yards for the score to put the Bears back up by 9, 31-22.

That was all the scoring that Ursinus would get on the day, as Muhlenberg scored two more times in the fourth quarter to put the game away.

Next week, the Bears travel to Carlisle to take on Dickinson, the top team in the Centennial Conference, in the final game of the 1993 season.

BEARS RECORD
AS OF 11/9:
4-4 overall,
4-3 in the Centennial Conference

IF I WAS IN CHARGE of the maybe even advancing two or three rounds into the postseason.

IF I WAS IN CHARGE of the sixers: I’d be very cautious. I need to see at least a month out of Shawn Bradley before making any rash judgments. In the first game of the season last Friday night, he didn’t do much (six points, five rebounds), but still had eight blocks. Besides, Moses Malone came off the bench for 16 points, and the 76ers still beat the Washington Bullets. Granted, the Bullets aren’t that good, but neither are the Sixers.

Another 76ers to watch is rookie power forward Warren Kidd, last year’s NCAA rebounding leader. Whatever he contributes could mean the difference between 25 and 35 wins this season. Yes, I think he’s a quality guy, even if he wasn’t drafted. But it doesn’t matter much—IF you can tell me the last time the Sixers retained their second-round draft pick, I’ll buy you a pair of tickets (one for me).

Harley's Haven

BY HARLEY DAVID RUBIN
Howard Stern's Idol

You’ll have to excuse me this week. I’m on a power trip. I guess I’ve just been thinking about how futile it is to sit here and write about the Philly sports teams. Things would be a lot better IF I WAS IN CHARGE.

IF I WAS IN CHARGE of the Phillies: I’d let Wes Chamberlain play every day; I’d trade John “Beer Me” Kruk for a front-line starting pitcher and move Dave “What? Me Throw?” Hollins to first base; I’d sign free agent Chris Sabo to play third; and I’d sure as heck do my best to pawn off Mitch Williams and shore up the bullpen.

In case you didn’t notice, the Phils traded backup outfielder “Harley David” Ruben Amaro, Jr. to the Cleveland Indians for relief pitcher Heathcliff Slocumb. I suppose this was a good move, although I hate to see Amaro go.

He’s from my neighborhood, and I like the way he plays, but he wasn’t going to get a chance to play everyday here (especially since ‘manager’ Jim Fregosi hates his guts) and we need bullpen help desperately. Slocumb, a former Cub, is a big strong righthander who should step right in.

IF I WAS IN CHARGE of the Eagles: I don’t know what I’d do. Randall is out for a long time, and Bobby Brister and Ken O’Brien together don’t equal a Randall. Injuries to almost everybody have totally depleted the bench. A trade right now wouldn’t work—any other team would just demand one of our top players. Although I wouldn’t be surprised if the guys who are really in charge tried to deal a Seth Joyner or Clyde Simmons, who are both in the last years of their contracts, for some more young talent or draft picks. Which might not be a terrible move. Unpopular, sure, but not a terrible move.

IF I WAS IN CHARGE of the Flyers: I wouldn’t change a thing. They’re off to an 11-3 start, their best in years. The goaltending, namely Dominic Roussel, has been tremendous. Charlie from Clamer would say that Felix Potvin of the Toronto Maple Leafs has been the best, and that might be true, but excellent performances are expected out of Potvin. Roussel sat the bench for much of last year and has stepped in while Tommy Soderstrom has his heart problems checked out.

New head coach Terry Simpson has done a great job with the Flyers, getting quality efforts out of every player. Of course, Eric Lindros, Mark Recchi, and Rod Brind’Amour have been excellent, with unexpected contributions from Josef Beranek and Mikael Renberg. If the defense continues to play well, the offensive firepower will be able to take over. Early prediction: easy ride to playoffs, tickets (one for me).

Indoor Volleyball and Intramural Sports

Registration is now going on for indoor volleyball for all. This year the teams have a choice of playing with the regulation volleyball or with a NEW STINGLESS VOLLEYBALL. The new volleyball is more sensitive to the touch, and therefore a little bit easier to play with—plus it doesn’t hurt! Sororities and fraternities are encouraged to sign up for a league of nonstop competition and fun. Independent teams are also needed. Entry forms can be obtained outside room #29 in Helfrich Hall. If you need additional information, call the school at 489-4111, ext. 2456.

Intramural flag football will hold its championship game tonight! Come watch the game, which pits APO versus APE in a battle that is sure to be covered on the Associated Press (AP) Newswire.

Lenny Dykstra, on hitting a game-winning homer in the bottom of the ninth to carry the Mets past the Astros in game three of the 1986 playoffs: "The last time I hit a home run in the bottom of the ninth to win a game was in Strat-O-Matic."
