These crested charms, these terrors of the sea.
Old aspirations through the bosom thrill,
By th' pleasing sadness of its low refrain,
A pleasing sadness, such as fills the soul
Then lose itself against the darker sea,
Will ever cherish in a favored niche
That all do err and none from faults are free—
Like sea shell, gathered when the waves depart,
And, when the storms thy shores forsake
I've strolled along thy sanded beach
And, ever in its fairest dressed,
Its loneliness it wished to tell,
And earth and sky would feel the peace:
And watched the scene before my eyes
Perchance a sail would cross the way,
As cottage with the ivy twined
And, ceaseless as thy waves may Ije
Thy ocean home may see.
