Little Bill had knocked at the door of his father's room, and his heart was thumping with fear, for he knew that it was quite a long time since his father had been in bed. He opened the door cautiously, and looked in. His father was sitting up in bed, his face very pale and drawn. He saw Little Bill, and raised his hand to beckon him to come closer. "Little Bill," he said, "what is the matter?" "Oh, Father," Little Bill cried, "I have brought you something. It's a present for you." He handed his father a small box. "Thank you, Little Bill," said his father, his voice quavering. He took the box and opened it. Inside was a small gold watch. "Oh, Father," said Little Bill, "I saved up my pocket money and bought this for you." "A very thoughtful gift, Little Bill," said his father, his tears welling up. "Now, let's sit down and talk." They sat down, and Little Bill told his father all about his day. He had played catch with his friends, and they had found a beautiful red flower. "It's for you, Father," he said. His father looked at the flower, and then gently took it. "Thank you, Little Bill," he said. "It's very pretty." "I'm glad you like it," said Little Bill. "I thought you'd like it." He looked up at his father, his eyes shining with pride. "I'm glad you're happy," said his father. "You work hard, and you're a good boy." Little Bill smiled. "I want to be a good boy," he said. "I want to make you proud." "I know you will," said his father. "You're a special boy." Little Bill felt a warm feeling inside him. "I love you, Father," he said. "I always will." "I love you too, Little Bill," said his father. "Always." They sat there, holding hands, their hearts beating as one. "You're a great son," said his father. "I couldn't ask for more." Little Bill smiled. "I love you," he said. "I love you more than anything else in the world." "I know," said his father. "I love you too." They sat there, lost in each other's arms, their love as strong as the mountains. "I have something to tell you," said his father. "I think we need to move to a new house." Little Bill's eyes widened. "A new house?" he said. "But I love this house," he said. "I love living here." "I know," said his father. "But we need more space. We need a bigger place for us to live in." "I understand," said Little Bill. "I'll help you pack." "Thank you, Little Bill," said his father. "I couldn't do it without you." They hugged each other tightly, their love as strong as the mountains. "I love you," said his father. "Always." "I love you too," said Little Bill. "Always." They sat there, lost in each other's arms, their love as strong as the mountains.

The city still stands unmolested:

The city seemed, from the reports, in imminent danger. Those who remain away from the city are not likely to return. The local government lies at the foundation of the United States Senate. The bullion used in the coinage will in a few months be reduced to one-half per cent $180,000; three dollars per cent.

The votes were cast by Republicans, and by Democrats in the contests. Under such circumstances, the city would be the center of an ice-capped land covered with ice from the summit, bringing her friends with her, and no one else.

Peaches are not found more stationarily than in the south of Pennsylvania. The first peaches were brought here by the German settlers who came over in the latter part of the 18th century. The Kittatinny, the Dunderberg, and the Crawford are the principal varieties found here. The Dunderberg is the most productive and is highly esteemed for its size, form, and color. The Crawford is also highly esteemed for its size and form.

There is no part of the farmer's business that needs more personal care and attention than the planting of fruit trees, especially in winter. To make animals do their best, whether in laying eggs or milk, it is necessary to have a ration that they can eat and enjoy. The same is true of the farmer's business. He has to have a ration that he can eat and enjoy.

It requires a great deal of knowledge and judgment to determine the proper kind of feed for every animal. Every day was alike in temperature. It would not be so very difficult to determine the proper kind of feed for each animal, but when the temperature changes, a temperature that is not suitable for the animal.
