Eccentric Circles by Gail Feid

Let us leave the possibility of other worlds where life is possible, and the chance of a future of man's暾s; we will get where we are to be a part of a "here-and-now", and we do not know the future. We cannot. Consider the reason of human existence, the evolution of human beings, but man is not a human being. We must serve the purpose of the world. We must be, or be nothing.

We are, or should be, interested in the same thing. We must be interested in ourselves. We must be interested in each other. We must be interested in our own lives. We must be interested in our own deaths. We must be interested in our own futures. We must be interested in the future of the world.

What Does Organized Labor Want?

by Holly Fitts and Bill Pratt

On Wednesday, March 15, Mr. Rosen, president of the United Auto Workers, spoke to the staff from the political science classes. Ready to address this that he was representing a pressure group, Mr. Rosen asked the students what they wanted from the government. He wanted to know what they would do in the future. Mr. Rosen was sent to recite the history of the story. After beating this up for a few seconds, Mr. Rosen was back to recite the story again before he was interrupted. John Heinemann, an Ursinus junior, characterized himself as a supporter of the "waste product of my gener­

TO THE EDITOR:

All through the letters of Mr. Broussard and "A Reader," I have seen the use of the word "should". A few readers have been taken to make a point or to be heard. Several readers also readily extended to both sides of the page. I was afraid of the use of my article of February 3rd ("The All-American Supermarket") which was grossly misunderstood. It was not the purpose of my letter to suggest that the reader see the business as an "American Supermarket." My purpose was to say perhaps you could point out one thing, but I want to admit the point is extremely important. When did Mr. Broussard's criticism begin when he refers to the "German Jews, the Jews who should have fled Germany or at least kept their children abroad."

Cinderella Boasts Greater Depth

The track season is rapidly approaching, there being only two weeks before the first meet. The previous scheduled meet was to have been last evening in Chester which was arranged for last Saturday, April 9, and will be run outdoors on a field and track. The meet was delayed due to weather conditions.

Ray Gueyvasquez is rather optimistic about the meet. He has a team built around a pair of 440 yard runners in eight and a half. It is greatly supplemented by a crew of 880 yarders, four of which are three-time All-American. Bob Keim scored 43 points in the 880 yard race and should make this meet an exciting one.

requirements of the waiver ruling and many, of course, have to be one that is played in the winter or fall. Some sport, if it becomes necessary to initiate one, whatever the sport, will probably pick up another team in before Easter vacation. And Jim Berlinger will add to the numbers.

Dear Editor,

Of course, we, instead of complaining,

 jogging towards the finish line of life.

And people like us, the most ordinary of all men,

 the common, indeed the most common,

 have no right to make such demands.

Do all Air Force officers have wings?

 Decidedly not. In fact most executive jobs are on the ground. Of course, all officers may apply for flight or navigator training if they meet the eligibility requirements. There will always be a need for pilots and navigators. And it is hazardous to try to estimate the actual number of students in our military, but it is generally accepted that 30 percent or more of them are male.

 How can you—a college student—become an Air Force officer? First, there's Air Force ROTC. Then, there's the National Guard, and men and women in certain fields, there is Officer Training School. The graduate of a three-month course with a commission as a second lieutenant. Other ways are the Navigator Training school, and the Air Force Academy.

 Some benefits that go with being an Air Force officer. Starting salary plus allowances equal to the average in equivalent civilian jobs. Then there's free medical and dental care, three days off every week for study, the chance to win graduate degrees at Air Force Academy and other universities in the country.

 No, Air Force officers do not need wings to fly. There's plenty done on the ground. Perhaps you could ask one of your young executive colleagues, ask your local Air Force Recruiter. Or write, Officer Candidate School, 4001 Voice Road, Washington 4, D.C., if you want further information.

You're There!

 There's a place for professional achievement on the Aerospace Team.
