As Indian Legend.

If you have ever spent a winter’s night alone and lost in the forest, you may have heard strange tales that are part of the folklore of the American prairie. These stories are often passed down from generation to generation, through the spoken word and in the retelling of legends. They are rooted in the history and culture of the Native American peoples who first inhabited these lands.

In this particular tale, the setting is the winter landscape of the Great Plains. The hero, Little Coon, is a brave and skilled hunter who is known throughout the Dakota tribes for his courage and cunning. One winter night, while hunting, he comes across a group of women who are searching for water in the midst of the snowstorm.

The women, who are part of a Dakota family, are forced to flee their teepee due to a fierce blizzard. They have no choice but to seek refuge in the harsh winter wilderness. Little Coon, moved by their plight, offers to help them and leads them back to safety.

The legend continues with stories of bravery, compassion, and the enduring spirit of the Dakota people. It reminds us of the importance of community and the resilience of the human spirit in the face of adversity.

PREPARING FOR WHEAT.

Although the details of the present harvest and the prices of wheat are not yet available, it is anticipated that the wheat crop will be large and will be of high grade. The state of the weather has tended to postpone the time of harvest, but the prospects are that the crop will be harvested in good order. The wheat is expected to be of good quality, and the prospects are that it will bring a fair price in the market.
