Date of Graduation to Change

From College Communications

In response to the urgings of the senior class, the date of the 1996 Ursinus College Commencement has been changed from the afternoon of Sunday, May 19, to Saturday morning May 18. An official announcement of the date change is expected from the President's Office sometime this week.

The senior class and college administration are currently proceeding with plans to have commencement outside on that date.

Several locations are being considered for the ceremony, and you will be notified as soon as exact location is determined.

The Baccalaureate service, in recent years held on Sunday morning on the day of Commencement, will now be held on Friday, May 17th, at 7 p.m., in order to make it as convenient as possible for parents and friends to attend. This service will be followed by an all-campus reception for students, their guests, faculty and staff.

Please mark these revised dates on your calendar now. More details will be forthcoming at a later date.

European Adventure

by Christy Kenny
Of The Grizzly

Do you find that the majority of your classmates at Ursinus are 'locals' who live within a few hours of campus? Well, in coming years, that may begin to change.

The recruitment of students never ends for any college, but Ursinus is now exploring new horizons in looking for students. Rick DiFeliciano recently returned from a European recruiting tour with twelve other U.S. colleges and universities. They went to high schools in London, Brussels, Athens, Vienna, Istanbul, and Rome presenting European students with information about their respective institutions and talked to students about attending American schools.

DiFeliciano is excited about the prospects of having more international students attending Ursinus. Not only does Ursinus provide a great opportunity for foreign students, but having a more diverse student community will help all students as we prepare for a world that is growing increasingly smaller as countries from all over the world come in constant business and professional contact with one another.

The students being recruited are some of the best in Europe, all of whom speak English very well and are planning on professional careers. Ursinus's strong academic program, as well as its location and size, are strong selling points for European students thinking about coming to the United States.

And as more European students come to Ursinus, other students will hear of their experiences and begin to consider making such a choice themselves. As this continually happens, recruitment efforts will not be as necessary, for the positive experiences of prior students will serve as recruiting agents themselves.

The change will not come immediately, but over time, Ursinus will evolve into a more diverse institution. And who knows? Maybe you will find a hallmate from Vienna, a lab partner from Rome, or a teammate from London in years to come. Learning comes in many ways. Through the efforts of Rick DiFeliciano as well as the others involved, Ursinus will continue to expand upon and celebrate the diversity of cultures among the student community.

Women Taking Action Through Self-Defense

by Brandy McLachlan
Of The Grizzly

A woman and her child abducted from a local shopping center, two Ursinus students mugged on campus...crime has come to Collegeville. Are you prepared? The women that participated in the Rape Aggression Defense program, better known as R.A.D., are.

It is a nation wide program that lasts six weeks and is taught here at Ursinus by security officer Paul Smith. In this course, women learn how to handle themselves in a world where rape, including date rape, is a realistic fear of all women. The women learn gruesome statistics about rape. They also learn key elements of self defense, such as awareness of the situation and defensive actions to take against an attacker. Throughout the program, the women are shown and practice things like kicks, punches, and blocks, in hopes of committing them to muscle memory so that they are ready to be used if needed. The program comes to a cumulative end when each participant must fight off an "attacker" and show what they have learned.

As one student, Melissa Forbes, said "I never knew how vulnerable I was before R.A.D., but now I feel much safer knowing concrete ways to protect myself. It changes your whole mind set about being attacked and makes you much more confident in your self defense abilities."

With all of the problems and violence facing women today, it is a wonderful reassurance to know you have the skills to ward off an attacker and the sense of security that the R.A.D. program offers.

We are overwhelmed by the success of the Ursinus Canathon - this event has resulted in a truck load of canned goods and other non-perishables for the needy of Montgomery County. The citizens of the Ursinus community were extremely generous, and we thank them.

We would like to acknowledge the work done by Todd McKinney and Beatrice May toward making this project so successful. Thank you to all the terrific Ursinus students and their parents who attended the collection tables - it was cold out there, but everyone honored their commitment and we are extremely grateful to all of the volunteers. Hopefully, this will become an annual parent/student effort, and the needy will benefit from this community service event.

What I Think

by Todd Brenneman
Of The Grizzly

Greetings and Salutations, friends. Efficient though I am, there was no article last week. This was due to overabundance of work that I had. Regrettably I have just as much, but I'm sure many of you loyal readers are eager to see how I respond to the charges that have been leveled at me.

In light of the attack, I have to plead guilty as charged. Derelict of being right. Oh, I don't know where that came from. Friends, I meant to say I am guilty of believing in GOD. May I proceed? Alas, I'm not ashamed in the least. Really. Going from that, my friends, what do I have to say in my defense? Oh, Nothing. That's the truth. I chose to let a Friend speak for me. "I am the Resurrection and the Life. No man comes to the Father but through me" (John 14:6). When I observed the attack leveled last week, I realized it was not only against me. It was against those who believe in the same things I do. I was vehement when I saw the ramblings of a self-proclaimed Christian claiming that the sacrifice of Jesus Christ was null and void. Would you also choose to slap the Savior while He was on the cross? MY Christianity is not a GAME. It is everything I believe. But I will not defend it here. Instead, I will ask and I want answers. I want you to tell me: How do 40 men over 1600 years in three languages (Greek, Hebrew, and Aramaic) on three continents (Europe, Asia, and Africa) weave a story so fantastic? Tell me why there are no inconsistencies in the Bible. Tell me how the real writers of the books in the Bible could predict events that would happen hundreds of years in the future (go to Ezekiel 26-28 for a start). But, that is just your opinion one may say. I guess in the end, yes, it's my opinion, but I can back it up and would be happy to anytime.

That being said. What's this article about? It's about what I think. That's right. This is my article. These ideas are my views. You may agree or disagree (and I appreciate both), but in the end it doesn't matter, simply because I will write what I think.

So what am I thinking about this week? I am thinking how nice it would be for all of you who read this to ATTEND THE URSINUS COLLEGE CONCERT BAND AND JAZZ ENSEMBLE CONCERT AT 8 PM ON SATURDAY NOV. 18 IN BOMBERGER AUDITORIUM!!!! But after putting that, I'm thinking alot about what has occurred over the past few weeks. No, dear readers, I will not irritate you by revisiting the homosexuality issue. Enough has been said about that. I want to talk about a distinct group that has really been persecuted over the past few years. Since the '60s and a little before, this group has had to put up with much persecution. They have been limited in the practice of free speech. They have been made fun of in countless circles. Their beliefs have been stepped on in numerous arenas including last week's Grizzly. Who are these people? They are the religious.

Surprise! I find it slightly humorous and very frightening when the religious are made fun. They are called closed-minded. They are equated with militants. What would the Founding Fathers say? What would Abraham Lincoln say? I find it appalling when songs like Cop Killer by Ice T and numerous others by rappers from Death Row and the like are protected by perversion of the First Amendment, and yet the Ten Commandments are not allowed in public schools. But, those songs are only words, one may say, that doesn't mean people will do anything about them. You know what? Words and images mean things and do and do affect people. Why do you think companies will spend millions on advertising?!? I also find it extremely disheartening when schools hand out condoms to fifth graders and will not teach abstinence. Do you know why? In Louisiana a judge ruled that abstinence need not be taught because of its religious overtones. Guess what folks, abstinence is the only 100 percent way of preventing sexually transmitted diseases and pregnancy. Abstinence is labeled "Puritanical" and other terms meant to degrade it. As Cal Thomas says, "The Puritans may have had problems, but AIDS wasn't one of them." If allowed to continue, our society in which GOD has been proclaimed dead, the destruction of the United States is imminent. No society can survive such a moral decline. Look at the Roman Empire. It wasn't destroyed from the outside. Rome became diseased and ate itself to nothingness from the inside. So, take your shots. Call me narrow and closed minded. Ostracize me. I'm not sorry for believing there is more than this life. I'm not sorry for believing in America the way it should be. I am positive that I am not sorry for believing in the Almighty HIMSELF. I will be the first to stand up and say there is RIGHT and there is WRONG. Yes, I believe that the TRUTH IS OUT THERE, and it can be found. You just have to know where to look.

Thanks for reading this week. I hope I did not anger to many. I would like to say I appreciate the comments that I have been getting, and I would appreciate it if more of you that disagree would make more comments. I am interested in hearing your viewpoints.

That's all for this week. Go see the Ursinus Concert Band and Jazz Ensemble. Vote for the NEWT!

In light of the recent battle that has been fought on the pages of this paper, I would like to bring attention to yet another issue that plagues our society, talk shows.

Although this issue is not a large facet of the 1996 campaigns, several representatives of each party are up in arms about it. I felt it best to convey my sentiments about controversial talk shows by writing to them in letter form:

Dear (any talk-show host with the exception of Oprah),

Although I found myself hooked on a particular show of yours, it was not for reasons of interest. Rather,

A Talk Show Circus

I was shocked. Not at the content, but at the exploiting methods you used to supposedly prove a point.

I tend to think this tactic is done to boost your ever-decreasing ratings, but that's another story.

For example, the show to which I am referring dealt with young children with violent tendencies. One mother broke down on the panel, yet you continued to hound her for more gory details.

Your "senior correspondent" interviewed various teens that had undergone therapy for their own violent tendencies. Instead of encouraging them to give advice and insight to the helpless parents, your correspondent prodded the teens to tell of their gruesome encounters with such things as guns and fire when they were younger. Then, he proceeded to glorify each kid's story.

I find this utterly disgusting, and what's more, it looks as if there is no end in sight to this exploitation.

During a commercial break, you provide an 800 number for people to call in. I was tempted to do so and make my complaint over the phone until I saw your profound question flash across the screen: "Have you ever used your face or body for career advancement?" The vicious cycle continues.

Now that I have vented and made you aware of my concerns, my only hope is that you take this to heart. There are others that feel the same way, and believe me when I say that I will never watch your circus, I mean show, again.

Sincerely,
A concerned ex-viewer

In Debate: King of Prussia Renovations

Christy says the renovations were not needed

by Christy Kenny
Of The Grizzly

Over one hundred new stores. That's right, over one HUNDRED new stores just opened in the King of Prussia Plaza. I have to wonder, is it really necessary?

The King of Prussia mall was renovated about two or three years ago, with a large number of new stores, new floors, skylights and other structural additions.

Furthermore, because the Court and Plaza at King of Prussia is one of the largest malls in the entire country, it makes perfect sense to add more stores onto it.

So now the Plaza is even bigger than before. Just in time for Christmas, too. What does that mean for the average suburban Philadelphia resident?

Well, first of all, it means incredible traffic coming in all directions toward the mall until the Christmas rush is over. So if you want to get anywhere around King of Prussia, the back roads are probably the best way to go, because people from near and far will be doing their holiday shopping at the Plaza and will be congesting the major roads.

More significantly, however, the size of the mall is a reflection of how materialistic society has become.

King of Prussia was a huge shopping complex before the additions, and now it has another hundred stores added on to it. Who really needs that many stores?

We have clothing stores, department stores, restaurants, shoe stores, novelty stores and stores for just about anything you can imagine. Actually, for everything you might want to buy, there are probably numerous stores that carry exactly what you want.

As the holiday season approaches, and we spend our evenings and weekends fighting through the crowds looking for gifts, it becomes harder and harder to remember the true meaning of our celebrations. Hopefully we will be able to enjoy the benefits of the King of Prussia mall while still remembering what is truly important in our lives.

Brandy says the renovations will help the economy

by Brandy McLachlan
Of The Grizzly

There are around 150 new stores in the King of Prussia mall. Why are people finding fault with this? In my opinion it is a dream come true.

Opponents view the new stores as materialism at its worst, but they couldn't be farther from the truth. The addition of the new stores can only help King of Prussia's economy.

First, it will bring in thousands of new visitors to the King of Prussia area, including many Ursinus students, I am sure.

While people are coming to see the new stores, they will visit the old stores as well, bringing more business to them. Furthermore, as people are shopping, they will also stop at the food court and spend their money there, bringing even more business to the food merchants.

The addition of the new stores equals more money for all the retailers involved. This is the realization of the American dream of owning a successful business in action.

In addition, as these businesses make more and more money and have more visitors, they will need to hire more employees. This benefits the King of Prussia economy as well by lowering the unemployment rate immensely.

How opponents can see fault in a system that benefits everyone involved is incomprehensible. As for me, holiday shopping here I come!

How Can You Say That God is the Truth?

by Stephanie Klenk

Special to The Grizzly

In recent weeks the argument on homosexuality has gradually become an argument on truth. Several people have asserted that homosexuality is a sin like all others and it is not justified according to God. Of course this statement raises the question: "How can you say that God is the truth?"

Perhaps this very question is the underlying cause of the debate. Do we believe that it is OK for us to pick and choose the rules by which we live, or do we believe that we are incapable of making reasonable guidelines by which to live and therefore must turn to God?

The first argument suggests that as individuals we are the best judges of right and wrong. Therefore we accept the laws of God only as they meet our approval. According to the second argument, as human beings who fall short of perfection, we are not able to decipher, on our own, right from wrong. However, in turning to God's word, we can begin to understand the laws, created by a perfect being, by which we are to live.

Rebecca Manley Pippert, author of Out of the Salt Shaker & into the World, challenges us to consider Jesus' command for us to love our enemies: "At first this seems reasonable, until we think of an enemy. Then we begin to question how can we possibly love someone who hates us. That would be going completely against our grain. So we determine that what Jesus must have meant was if we see our enemy walking down Main Street we shouldn't trip them or fight them, rather we should walk down the other side of the street. He could not have possibly meant love in the sense that we think of it."

Essentially we see how high God's standards are and how far we are from living up to them. We recognize the vast gap between his demands and our behavior and try to narrow the gap by softening his claims, accommodating ourselves.

The Jesus of the Gospels, however, is uncompromising. This may seem offensive to some, perhaps even arrogant, but it is the essence of Christianity. Why should a perfect man compromise his standards to meet the needs of our sinful, imperfect world? Left on our own, we cannot create a plan for living even close to that of God's. It is written, "As for God, his way is perfect; the word of the Lord is flawless" (2 Samuel 22:31).

I think that we are much more arrogant when we think that Jesus' teachings are not good enough for us to follow. Instead we insist that we have a better understanding of ourselves than does Christ, himself. How arrogant of us to pick and choose what we will obey. Jesus calls us to obey all of his teachings, not just the ones we find appealing. At times this may be hard to do and may even make us feel uncomfortable, but it is what we are commanded to do. We are overwhelmed as we are made aware that we cannot attain perfection. However, we still must strive for Christ's standard.

In the end we will be held accountable to this standard alone. Will we walk in our own sinful, imperfect ways, or will we accept Christ? Jesus says, "I am the way and the truth and the life. No one comes to the Father except through me" (John 14:6).

The Only True Judge is God

by Theresa Tiriro

Special to The Grizzly

When all of the fuss over GALA's meeting started, I sat by and watched. I did not want to get involved, because I felt that the uproar would disappear in a few days. Then Dr. Nagy's first letter appeared in the Grizzly. I was disturbed by the manner in which he expressed his views, but I still said nothing. When I received this week's issue of The Grizzly with Dr. Nagy's second letter, I was so enraged that I felt I had to reply. The contents of the "esteemed" doctor's letter perturbed me.

First, Dr. Nagy made the brass assumption that Gina Oboler was going to apologize. It was, at the very least, insensitive, if not downright obnoxious of Dr. Nagy to assume that Dr. Oboler was going to apologize to him.

Second, Dr. Nagy continued to compare homosexuals to adulterers and pedophiles. This comparison is completely unfounded. Homosexuals do NOT infringe on any other person's basic rights, and they only ask that others treat them in the same accord. Adulterers and pedophiles, while possessing the lack of ability to control their sexual appetites, as Dr. Nagy states homosexuals do, also hurt others in the process. I can recall numerous times when a young wife has cried because her husband cheated on her, and I also have had experience working with children who are victims of incest and pedophilia. I cannot recall a time when any homosexual has come to me, or any one I know, and complained that their lover was a homosexual. I do not believe that Dr. Oboler was encouraging adultery and pedophilia, but rather encouraging the fact that ALL people should be free to love whomever they choose, as long as that love does not infringe on the personal rights of the other individual. He also states that he encourages people to overcome their handicaps, insinuating that homosexuality is one of those handicaps. Homosexuality should not be considered a handicap. People like Dr. Nagy turn it into one.

Dr. Nagy writes about a young relative who died of AIDS, and he writes that the young man had been a cheerful person until the misery of his behavior began to torment him. What was really tormenting him was the disease that was ravaging his body. Later in his letter, Dr. Nagy states that "this disease has claimed the lives of many people who do not engage in the activities that are most likely to transmit it." I would like to pose a question to Dr. Nagy. If these "innocent" people do not engage in the activities that will transmit AIDS, then how, pray tell, did they get it? It is true that there have been cases where people have received tainted blood through transfusions, such as Ryan White. With today's advanced medical technology, there are tests administered to blood before it is used for transfusions to prevent transmissions. In effect, the only conceivable ways that a person can acquire AIDS is through sharing needles and sexual contact; not only homosexual sex, but any sex. This fact is further illustrated by the point that the fastest growing group to contract AIDS is young women. How would Dr. Nagy's theory explain this?

Dr. Nagy also states that his view is the most prominent one. It is almost as if he is attempting to justify his opinion about homosexuals by saying that it is the majority opinion. The majority is not always correct. Slavery is an excellent example of this point. Yet, Dr. Nagy would lead us to believe that any view that is in the majority is automatically the correct one.

Dr. Nagy writes in his conclusion that two students who wrote in response to his first letter came "dangerously close to intolerance and bigotry" when they said that they would not want to be in his class. I feel compelled to agree with those two students that they would not want to be in a class with a professor who disapproves of homosexual behavior. Such a professor is not an open minded person, and I do not believe this environment is conducive to learning. Dr. Nagy needs to understand the fact that there are people in this world that do not adhere to his moral standards, and no matter what his opinions about those people are, they still deserve his respect as fellow human beings. Our Constitution states that ALL men are created equal. This idea is included in our Constitution, and the Bible states that we should not judge each other, because the only true judge is God.

Read the First Amendment

To the Editors:

In response to Todd Brenneman's views on religion and public life in the United States, let me suggest reading the First Amendment. It says, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof."

As a member of a minority group in the U.S., some of whose ancestors came to this country to escape persecution in other lands, I am grateful and proud that the Constitution does not see religion as being the business of the State.

Sincerely yours,

Frances Novack
Dept. of Modern Languages

Unfortunately, Ace Ventura: When Nature Calls is not nearly as funny as its predecessor.

Ace (Jim Carrey) goes to Africa, and is hired to find the missing holy animal of the Wachati tribe, a rare white bat. We find out that Ace is petrified of bats (could that have anything to do with the fact that Carrey was The Riddler in Batman Forever?). This plot may sound similar to that of Ace Ventura: Pet

Detective, in which Ace has to find Snowflake, the kidnapped mascot of the greatest football team in history, the Miami Dolphins (Sorry to intrude on your column, Charlie).

Anyway, Ace has to find this bat, called Shakaka, or else the princess of the Wachati tribe and the prince of the warrior Wachootoo tribe (say that five times fast) cannot be married.

As you can see, this movie, like its prequel, is significantly lacking in the plot department. However, unlike its prequel, this movie is not very funny, except for a few moments of hilarity. Also, God himself, also known as Dan Marino, isn't in it. Most of this movie's jokes are either recycled from the first movie, or just plain disgusting, involving lots of bodily fluids, and even internal organs. I would probably find this movie much funnier after a few beers. The only really funny moments were a parody of Cliffhanger and a scene in which Ace is making shadow puppets during a slide show.

Although I thought the first Ace was one of the funniest movies ever, this sequel was not nearly as funny. I will only recommend this movie if you are under the age of 10 or really drunk. Just have a designated driver take you home after the movie. Rating- 4 (Not too Good)

Movie quote of the week- Last week's quote, "Illinois Nazis... I hate Illinois Nazis" was from The Blues Brothers, and was finally identified by junior biology major John Kerrigan after many wrong guesses from other people, ranging from Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade to School Ties. This week's quote is "Risk is part of the game if you want to sit in that chair." Good luck, and here is yet another reminder that my extension is 3212.

Concert band and Jazz Ensemble to perform Saturday

by Colin Tucker

Arts and Entertainment Editor

On Saturday, November 18, the Ursinus Concert Band and Jazz Ensemble, under the direction of Anthony D.J. Branker, will present its winter concert.

The concert band will open the evening with performances of Gustav Holst's "Second Suite in F Minor for Military Band," and "Water Music" by George Frideric Handel. The concert band will also perform "The Inferno," the first movement of The Divine Comedy by Robert W. Smith. The concert band will close the set with John P. Zdechlik's "Chorale and Shaker Dance." You may recognize the melody in this song as the same traditional Shaker melody used in Aaron Copland's masterpiece, "Appalachian Spring."

The Jazz Ensemble, which briefly performed at President Strassburger's inauguration ceremony as the audience was entering and leaving, will continue its tradition of performing works from many different facets and eras of jazz music.

The band will perform the Sonny Rollins standard "Impressions," arranged by Mark Taylor. They will also perform Bob Mintzer's recent composition "Brotherhood," a funk ballad that begins with an emotional brass choir, and "Oye Como Va," an upbeat Latin Rock chart that features many soloists throughout the ensemble.

The Jazz Ensemble is proud to present two vocalists for this program, sophomore Christina Dappollone and senior Mary Greiss. Dappollone, complemented by piano soloist Brooke Garbarino, will sing the standard "Darn That Dream." Greiss will perform "Who Can I Turn To?," and both vocalists will duet on a distinctive upbeat salsa arrangement of the familiar "It Don't Mean a Thing if it Ain't Got that Swing."

Do not miss this exciting concert, which begins at 8:00 p.m. on Saturday, November 18 in the Bomberger Auditorium.

Going Medieval on the Mall

by Joseph Catalano
Of The Grizzly

Well, the inevitable has finally occurred. No, I am not talking about another Police Academy sequel, but rather the opening of a few hundred new stores in King of Prussia Mall. Correct me if I'm wrong, but wasn't the mall already large enough to house a few third-world countries?

Now, going to the mall is almost as difficult as seeing the hidden image in those damn "Magic Eye" pictures.

Having recently seen the movie Mallrats, my friend and I were prompted to discover mall culture for ourselves. That was our first mistake (well, tragedy actually began with the movie itself... think Cabin Boy set in a mall). Personally, I hate going to the mall. Malls traumatize me, especially during Christmas. As a child getting his five-year-old head caught between the railing bars on the second floor, I had a dreadful premonition of a department store Santa yanking me by the legs as my head popped off and fell into some innocent shopper's Macy's bag (what better way to say "I love you" than with a decapitated head?). Needless to say, I still cling to the second floor walls.

After duping my friend into driving, I was ready to boldly go where no man in his right mind should go without a definite plan of attack (or at least a bottle of aspirin). As a personal rule, I refuse to drive anywhere that requires driving under a 45 mph threshold - I am convinced that my car will blow up if I hit 44. King of Prussia's new mean speed limit is now around a blaring 9.2 mph.

I send my sincerest sympathies to those unfortunates who must deal with this frustration everyday. Once I hit traffic in such a congested area, I will turn anywhere merely to maintain my 45 mph - which is, consequently, why I have spent most of my driving career in the pastures of Lancaster (the Amish are terrible drivers—especially when the horse is sick).

Parking is so difficult at the mall, that it now peddles valet parking. Assuming the role of someone who gives a damn, I convinced my friend to park his own car as I saw the "valet" clad in tom, black leather pants and a "Hukt on Foniks Werkd fur Me" t-shirt. His name plate, coincidentally, read "Ottoe" in red crayon. After an hour circumnavigating the mall looking for a parking space, I was ready to call it a night. My friend, however, urged me on. Finally parking somewhere closer to Franklin Mills Mall, we were finally ready to be overwhelmed by the essential mall experience.

Upon entrance into the mall, I knew I had made a horrible mistake in not staying home and watching Urkel. The mall was almost as crowded as Heidi Fleiss' bedroom, as if that was a huge suprise. After twenty minutes of walking in circles and appeasing my friend by browsing through Victoria's Secret (picking up some great XMas ideas for the family), I suggested we find a map for this labyrinth-like structure obviously a front for Russian conspirators corrupting American capitalism.

"I'm sorry, sir, but no new maps have been printed at this time," replied Fran the I Memorized All The

Responses In The Book They Gave Me' Information Desk Clerk. "But we do have the widest variety of stores on the east coast."

Testing the truthfulness of this bold assertion, I replied, "Where, Fran, can I find a 24-hour wicker store that specializes in postmortem Bushman art?" "Would you like to stay in the Court or go to the Plaza?" Infuriated with the computerized reply of Fran, I suggested that somewhere within walking distance would be nice.

Any store you want to find, no matter how outrageous the theme may be, will probably be in King of Prussia Mall. I just can't wait until the new Psychic Friends Network store opens next week! Of course, the price tag always attached to your latest and strangest needs is always a bit more than you expected it to be, but commercialism has its price. I discovered this as I received two quarters for my dollar in the change machine.

After explaining my theory about the Russians to some officers, they were kind enough to escort me out of the mall and into the parking lot. Unfortunately, we did not remember where we parked, and I briefly reconsidered taking my chances with Ottoe upon my next visit, sometime around the year 2002. Somehow, I believe that Ottoe will still be there. This was one of the many times I wished I owned the Batmobile - a mere button on my bat-belt would send my car searching for me. The presidential candidate who is willing to ditch the space program in favor of mass producing bat-equipment for parking-lot-challenged individuals such as myself has got my vote.

As I searched for my car, I met with some other unfortunate folks who were also fruitlessly searching for their transportation. One elderly gent admitted he had been looking for two days! Engaging my deepest sympathies, I bought this gent a five-dollar hot dog and three-dollar cup of coffee from one of the parking-lot vendors who claimed to be on his way to Sunday's game at the Vet. Call me exaggerated, call me critical, but never call me to go to the mall.

Ottoe - bring my horse around.

The Tempest a Success

by Vicky Wilkins
Of The Grizzly

Two weeks ago, the Ursinus drama group, proTheatre, gave six performances of William Shakespeare's The Tempest. Although the play was written in the Elizabethan era, proTheatre was able to incorporate a more contemporary perspective into the play-- the issue of character gender.

For this production, five traditionally male roles were changed to female roles. Prospero, Trinculo, Ariel, Adrienne (Adrian), and Frances (Francisco) were the roles that were played by women, as women.

Although Shakespeare wrote these parts for men (in fact, all characters, male and female, were played by males in Shakespeare's time), these particular roles allowed for flexibility in gender.

"When I was first approached by Dr. Henry with the idea [of the reversal of character gender], I embraced it," says Jane Agostinelli, who co-directed the production with Dr. Joyce Henry. Agostinelli also feels that Shakespeare's material is suitable for such an interpretation: "Shakespeare really lends himself to it...and proTheatre is a good place for experimental theatre."

This theatrical production was further enhanced by the skills of many generous individuals, especially Oreste Migli (set designer), Rebecca Jaroff (lighting), Carol Silber (costume coordinator), and Leon Petrus, who composed original music for this production. The actors involved came from all walks of Ursinus life: students, faculty (Dr. Henry and Dr. Jon Volkmer), alumni (Alan McCabe), and community members (H. John Henry).

The interpretation was well-received by the participants and the audiences. "We are very pleased at the turnout," says Agostinelli, noting that Saturday night's performance was sold-out.

The high attendance at all of the performances, coupled with the positive reception, contributed to the overall success of this experimental production of The Tempest.

Ethnic-American Writers Series Presents Lisa Jones

by Erin Gambeski
Of The Grizzly

Lisa Jones, author of Bulletproof Diva: Tales of Race, Sex, and Hair, shared her thoughts on being a writer and an American on Thursday, Nov. 9. Jones held a workshop in the Unity House Thursday afternoon to discuss her writing technique and to give advice to students interested in writing professionally. Thursday evening, Jones gave a speech in Olin auditorium entitled, "What's Your Contract with America" to encourage people to get involved and make a difference in their community.

As a journalist, playwright, and screenwriter, Jones' writing skills occupy a number of mediums. In addition to compiling her book of essays from her monthly column "Skin Trade," Jones has coauthored three books with Spike Lee, written radio and stage plays and is currently working on a screenplay adaptation of Toni Morrison's Sula.

Students at the workshop had a variety of questions for Jones, including: What inspires you?

As a resident of New York City, much of Jones' journalistic material comes from the people and events surrounding her. She approaches everything from her point of view as the epitome of "multiculti" since she is the daughter of an African-American father and a Jewish mother.

In transferring a novel to the big screen, Jones states that the most difficult aspect is knowing what elements are inherent to the story and which can be left out. Jones is very excited about her new project Sula and believes that the public desires more from films other than more "shoot-em-up" action movies.

Jones concluded her workshop with advice on how to get started as a professional writer. She encourages students to write as often as possible and to publish their ideas in school magazines. While at Yale University as an undergraduate, Jones herself started her own magazine. Such activities are beneficial for students as they provide experience in writing for the public and a forum for student ideas. Jones also suggested that students try to make connections with many professors, lecturers, and people in literary fields.

Jones' lecture that evening focused less on writing and more on what people can do to help America. We are moving towards a multicultural, multilingual, and multiethnic society, Jones believes, and "we're gonna have to learn to live together." Jones refers to herself as "culturally abundant" and writes about the positive aspects of culture and society.

However, there is a large portion of America which fears change and despises difference. Therefore, Jones believes people must challenge this "Republican ego." Jones believes that people must have a relationship with America and suggests every person draw up a contract with America on what they will do to better society.

Jones cited four items to be thought about when creating this contract:

1. We live in an "All-America." There is no single racial majority so we have to learn to accept each other and live together.

2. "Culture is a powerful tool -- make good use of it." Culture and art can often do more to change society than legislation.

3. Support anti-censorship movements because "art is the lifeblood of any community."

4. Enlarge your political community since political work starts right where you are.

"Give to, give back, make noise" is Jones' call and her presentation made clear that students can and should make a difference in this world. In both her workshop and lecture, Jones provided ideas on how students can improve themselves and their community. She inspired many by giving the Ursinus community something to think about as we "offer some vision of our own."

Philosophy Major Now Available

by Erin Gorman
Special to The Grizzly

The Philosophy and Religion department has made an alteration which now allows students to choose a major strictly in Philosophy. Students will be able to study intensively philosophical discourse without being required to take classes in religion. The existing major in Philosophy and Religion will still be available to students who desire to major in that discipline.

The new major will offer a combination of the now available courses in philosophy and the study of classical and contemporary political philosophy, taught by Dr. Paul Stern, now part of the Politics and Philosophy and Religion departments.

On the subject of utility, philosophy majors will be given the foundations for entering, not only graduate studies in the field, but also will find opportunities in the fields of law, politics, education, civil service, medicine and many others.

As an English major and a Philosophy minor, I have found my studies in Philosophy to be invalable to my education, both in my major and in general. I have found my experience of reading Mary Wollstonecraft, with an understanding of the views of Rousseau on women's education which she denounced, infinitely richer. My understanding of the motivations, the passions of the Renaissance Humanists is all the greater for having read Plato and Aristotle. Whole dimensions of understanding of the literature of Toni Morrison and Gloria Naylor have been made available by studying the philosophical works on the ethics of caring or on hyper-individualism.

Most importantly, I feel that I have been possessed of the skills to excel in any discipline, because the goal of the Philosophy department, as should be the aim of liberal education in general, is to aid the development of a clear understanding of one's own opinions about how one should live, and instill a lifelong commitment toward thought and contemplation.

I encourage anyone who is interested in a major in Philosophy to speak with someone in the department regarding their work.

The Bookstore is Changing, Voice Your Opinion

by Melissa Forbes
Of The Grizzly

Here's the scenario: you buy a brand new book from the Ursinus bookstore. You take good care of it, so it will be as good as new by the end of the semester. When the semester is over, you sell your book back to the bookstore, with hopes of gaining some cash. After the deed is done, you think to yourself, while pondering the grand total sum of five dollars you received for your twenty-five dollar book, "I've been robbed!"

This scenario is one that many students experience when they try to sell their books back to the Ursinus bookstore. Well students, fear no more. Someone is here to help. A study group has been formed with the purpose of analyzing the present bookstore and discussing the possibility of changes for the bookstore in the future.

A survey contained in this issue of the Grizzly (p.9) is aimed at getting the student perspective on desired changes for the bookstore. The survey asks a variety of questions that will help the study group get an idea about what Ursinus students really want from their bookstore.

One solution the chair of the study group, Dr. Economopoulos, is hoping will be considered is a co-op program. This program would allow students and even members of the community to "own" the bookstore. Students would be able to make decisions about the bookstore as both the seller and consumer. The co-op program would also be educational because as Dr. Economopoulos states, "Students would learn about the dynamics involved in running a business."

So students, if you feel the bookstore is turning you into a victim then now is the time to take action. Fill out the survey and voice your opinions about the Ursinus bookstore, so maybe the next time you sell a book back you'll be able to afford more than a value meal at McDonald's.

What's Up in Wellness?

by Kim Ryan
Of The Grizzly

Your paper is due tomorrow - 10 pages by 8 am. So far, you have two lines. Worried? Probably. You somehow finish the paper and try to print it out. It didn't save. It's lost forever. You ask yourself, "Why me?"

It's 12 noon and you are starving. You have a class in 30 minutes and of course Wismer is packed. Annoyed? Probably.

You have two tests on the same day, O Chem and Human - no problem, right?

You play on the field hockey team. The game is still tied after two periods of overtime play. Now, it must be decided by penalty strokes and you are a shooter. Nervous? Probably.

You are a college senior graduating in five months with no plans for the future. Will you be asking yourself "Okay, now what?"

Who ever said college wasn't stressful? Probably the same person who calls it the best time of one's life. Yet, we as college students, encounter a great deal of stress. So, for days such as these when nothing seems to go right or you feel like the world is out to get you, have faith. There is a simple solution.

Take a deep breath and think about the things that make you smile, such as:

- big paychecks
- a goodnight kiss
- the beginning of a weekend
- the perfect shower temperature
- cancelled classes
- fresh sheets and blankets on the bed

- the prize in a cereal box
- the sneeze that tickles but never comes
- loving what you do and having the chance to do it every day
- soft, worn jeans

Surely we have all experienced times of stress and lived days we would like to forget. But unfortunately, anxiety is a part of life. And no, these thoughts won't help you to finish a paper by 8 am or retrieve one that the alleged computer lost.

But, if a smile results from reading them or you are able to forget, if only for a few seconds, the problems of the day, then they have served their purpose. So, when times get tough, relax. Take a deep breath and remember that everyone has something to be happy about and there are always reasons to smile.

CHAOS by Brian Shuster

"Well Dr. Stone, it looks like we've reached a dead end. I can't decipher these hieroglyphics, and without them we'll never find the hidden chamber."

Chi Rho Psi Says: Thank you

To the Students of Ursinus College,

This is just a letter to thank you for all of your assistance during our 1995 homeless lunch program.

Early in the morning of Oct. 29, we gathered the contributions and assembled 541 lunches. The brothers then divided into three groups and traveled to homeless shelters in Pottstown, Norristown, and South Philadelphia. At these facilities we handed out the lunches and had an opportunity to talk to the people and observe the homeless problem first hand.

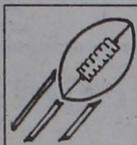

It was to say the least a humbling experience. Unfortunately though, the problem is bound only to get worse, for government funding for these shelters is being cut drastically. Contributions like yours are necessary if we are to have any hope of compensating for this loss of funds.

Thank you once again for your generosity and support. It was indispensable and is greatly appreciated. We would like to express our appreciation to the staff at Wismar for all of their time and help. Hopefully this event can be made into an annual one and this service can continue for a very long time.

Sincerely,

Carl Ewald

Falls To Dickinson, 27-12

Carlisle — Dickinson (5-1-1, 6-3-1) converted three turnovers into second-half touchdowns to earn a 27-12 come-from-behind win over Ursinus (1-6, 3-7), and bring the Bears' frustrating season to an equally disheartening conclusion.

Ursinus held a 12-7 lead at the intermission on the strength of two Rob Hagenberg touchdowns, but the wheels fell off in the second half. Dickinson turned two Chris Orlando interceptions into third quarter scores to take a 20-12 lead. An Orlando fumble in the fourth quarter was converted into another touchdown to put the game away.

"It is very frustrating," head coach Steve Gilbert said. "As I said last week, it's a shame we are 3-7 because I think we have a better team than that."

"I told the guys after the game that this has been my favorite team to coach. They came out and played hard each week. They had a tremendous attitude, which started in the off-season and continued to the end of this game."

Chris Hughes rushed for 86 yards and three touchdowns to lead Dickinson.

Hagenberg scored on a two-yard run to give the Bears a 6-0 lead. His nine-yard touchdown reception put the Bears up 12-7 in the second quarter.

POWER PLAY

The Soul of Rock and Roll

A PHILLY FAN

by Joel Schofer

Assistant Sports Editor

Fresh off of a 34-12 loss at the hand of the hated Cowboys, one thing is readily apparent. Before the Eagles will be able to move into the upper echelon of the NFL (in other words, before the Eagles will be able to compete with the Cowboys), they need to fill the gaping hole they've got at the quarterback position.

You may remember that I was an advocate for the installation of Rodney Peete as the starting quarterback, and I still am, but never, ever, ever did I say that he should have a place on the Eagles for more than a season or two.

Right now he's better than the other two alternatives, Randall Cunningham and Jay Fiedler. He's a solid, albeit fragile quarterback who's good at not screwing up, and right now that's all that I need.

Cunningham, whom I'm sure more than a few Eagles fans wanted to see last Monday night, probably would have thrown at least four interceptions, and I'm sure double digits wouldn't have been out of the question.

Now I'm obviously kidding, but you know what I mean. Of the two quarterbacks, Peete can better direct the offense, but his direction of that offense is not adequate if a Super Bowl is what the Eagles are after.

In the next two NFL drafts, the Eagles number one priority should be to get a young quarterback that will develop into a solid NFL starting quarterback, or they can trade for one. I don't care how they do it, but they need to do it. Nothing was made more evident by the loss to the Cowboys.

What is also evident is that the Sixers tragic flaw is a lack of ball handling ability and an unfamiliarity with each other.

Seventy-one turnovers in the first three games! Seventy-one!!! That is a lot of turnovers, even for a team without a point guard.

John Lucas' run-and-gun offense is the culprit. The majority of the turnovers have come on the fast break, or what should probably be referred to as TRYING to start the fast break.

This is to be expected, of course, from a team with three new starters and it undoubtedly will get better as the season goes on.

After the first three games, I must say that my prediction of 38 wins still sounds about right, but I must also say that my prediction of 18-20 points a game from Jerry Stackhouse is ABSOLUTELY an underestimation.

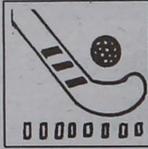

After three games, he already averages 25.3 points, and while I do realize that it is only three games, any Sixers fan and even non-Sixers fans must admit that his skills are phenomenal! He will be an All-Star for years to come and is my pick for rookie of the year.

If it appears as if I'm excited...well...it's because I am. Actually, I'm tremendously excited, and for good reason because although the Sixers don't have what it takes to contend this year, they've got five players who are a solid foundation for the future.

Besides, I get to watch Vernon Maxwell redefine the position of point guard.

point guard - a position in the game of basketball usually occupied by the player with the greatest ability to handle the basketball so that he/she may use these ball-handling skills to enable himself to shoot the basketball as many times as is humanly possible.

Team Falls in ECAC Semis

Hanover, N.H. — Dartmouth goalkeeper Lauren Demski saved all six shots she faced to record her fourth straight shut out and send Ursinus homewith a 1-0 loss in the first game of the ECAC playoffs.

The host's Kelly Hannigan scored an unassisted goal with 32:30 to play in the game, and Demski made it stand up.

Dartmouth (12-5) outshot

Ursinus (10-7) 12-6. Barb Golley saved 10 shots in goal for the Bears.

The Big Green will host Yale in this afternoon's championship game. Yale defeated Cornell, 2-0, in the other semifinal game.

The ECAC playoff appearance was the Bears' first since 1989. Their 10-7 record was the best since 1986, when they also compiled a 10-7 mark.

CHUCK'S WAGON

Dale Davis of the Indiana Pacers is one of my favorite players in the NBA. He's really cool. I guess I like him because he does all the dirty-work and none of that over-rated Jerry Stackhouse, Michael Jordan razzmatazz. He rebounds, blocks shots, eats bagels with cream cheese and jelly, and fouls people. He fouls people hard. Clean hard fouls are cool to watch. I'm not talking about raking a player's head or uh...say the thumb of the most devastating player of all time. But standing up to a pansy point guard with a flying body press is something I like to see. Dale Davis does that.

Now Bobby Hurley of the Sacramento Kings, who assumedly now wears his seat belt all the time, is from North Jersey. I don't like North Jersey. Every now and then during the summer, Pussboy Hurley comes down to what you people call the Shore, and acts like he owns the place. So does his even scrawnier brother Danny. Now if you ask Bobby Hurley who I am, he'll say he doesn't know, but I've seen his sorry act hanging around the greater Toms River area, and I know what this clown is all about. You know how everyone has a list of people you'd like to tie up and start wailing on? Bobby Hurley is on my list. I know what you're thinking.

And that brings me to the correlation between Mr. Davis and Mr. Wussy. Friday night saw an absolutely horrendous brawl between the Kings and Pacers. And who would've thought that it got started when the wispy Hurley drove the whole and ran into a brick wall named Dale Davis? Running into anything is not usually good, especially if you run into a turmpike overpass guard rail on the way home from Dickinson and almost die, or a buzzsaw named The Corporation.

Of course, since I think Hurley is a punk, I'm all for any form of bodily harm to the 43 lb. point guard. Davis was quoted as saying right after the foul, "Reebok Blacktop. You come strong, or you don't come at all." Well, Kings tough guy Michael Smith, who endorses Nike would have none of that. He came over and started in with Davis. And then all hell broke loose. If you saw the tape, at this point Hurley scurried like a little rat to the foul line and started to cry.

In comes Dale's buddy Antonio Davis, another fine gentleman who is strongly concerned with basketball fundamentals like fighting. Antonio Davis is not someone to be messed with. About 14 other guys from both teams cleared the bench to fight. Included in this rampage was three foot Kings guard Tyus Edny. If you watch closely you'll see him scratching the shins of several Pacers. The Mayor Freddy Hoiberg started issuing summonses to the infracting players. Ooh, that was a rough one. It was a decent fight which also featured one ref getting his faced ripped off.

A fiasco this was (That's how Yoda would say it). All in all, so many players were suspended that players will serve their games alphabetically due to the rule that 8 men must dress for a game. The CBA clown officials were likely the culprits in this mess, but if Bobby Hurley can't take the heat, then he should get out of the kitchen. We on a mission.

Now I'm pretty sure that I've stayed away from them this season thus far, but seriously, how bad are the Eagles? How bad is it when your quarterback can not, will not, and quite earnestly should not throw a football more than 15 yards. I'm not going to sit here and tell you that Randall Cunningham is the answer because one, I don't really care, and, two, he is dumber than any member of the Round Table. Rodney Peete is atrocious. I think the Eagles need to give Charlie Garner smaller shoulder pads, make him the quarterback, and run the option the whole time. And uh...how's your burger.

I also wish I had stayed away from discussing the 49ers dim future last week, because I certainly will not hesitate in doing so this week once again. There was a deep puke reverberating throughout the walls of Candlestick last Sunday afternoon. I refuse to call it 3COM Park because I'm too cool. The puke was, of course, due to the phenomenal performance the 49ers put forth against the expansion Panthers. I would generally think that an offense that has Jerry Rice, John Taylor, Brent Jones, and JJ Stokes on the field at the same time, you could score say, more than 7 points in 4 quarters of football. You could have a JUGS machine shooting balls, and they should score more than 7 points against an expansion team. The problem with the Niners is not that Steve Young is absent and playing hide and go seek with Rickey Ervins. Elvis is no ProBowler, but he is in the NFL, and I'm not. The problem is that the Niners have no one to light a fire under their rears. William Floyd is hibernating for the winter, and Deion is an enemy. The Niners are a team of laid back karaoke singers. They're certainly not bad players, but when there is no one, player or coach, that can motivate a team with 55 AllPros to score more than 7 points against a Carolina Panther team, then something smells rotten in the state of Denmark.

There are some humongous injuries in the NHL right now. None larger than Pavel Bure of the Canucks being sent out for the year on Friday night. The whole idea in Vancouver was to recreate the Russian Red Army front line of Bure, Alexander Mogilny, and Big Country Bryant Reeves. Other than the national NHL sponsor of Budweiser, this may have been the most anticipated development for this season. Bure and Mogilny are 2 of the top 3 fastest skaters in the NHL, the other being Phil Blessington. It would've been nice to see the good old boys back together again.

Last week there were several people who knew Cowboy Bob Orton and Ace for 2 of Bob Orton's 3 nicknames. More than 1 person cited the name Boxing Bob Orton. Now that's crap. If you see someone in passing and call him big guy or dude, is that his nickname? NO NO NO. The name I was looking for was this. There was a team that featured Bob Orton and The Magnificent Don Muraco. The team was managed by the devious one Mr. Fuji. The team's name was composed of 2 new nicknames for Orton and Muraco. Muraco was the Tank, and Orton was the Technician. The Tank and the Technician. For the next World Wrestling Federation Trivia Question of the Week. Many wrestlers have had managers. But one wrestler had a Coach. Name him. That's all for this week, and if Buddy didn't get us home from Dickinson, the pleasure wouldn't have been all yours.
