The Valley of Diamonds.

People were always looking for diamonds, and making about as much water as they could. They were known to be worth their weight in gold, and often more. It was a fair enough speculation, and they tried it every year.

Captain Yalletort, who had retired after a long and successful career in the navy, was making one of those attempts. He had bought a claim in the valley, and was working hard to find the diamonds he knew must be there. He had read every book on the subject, and was confident that he knew how to do it.

One day, while he was working at his claim, he came across a curious looking rock. It was dark and heavy, and seemed to be something unusual. He took a sample to the lab, and the experts were amazed.

The rock turned out to be a rare and precious diamond! Captain Yalletort's fortune was made. He sold it for a fortune, and retired in comfort.

The Effects of Heat on Metal.

There are some metals that change color when heated. For example, iron changes from red to brown as it is heated, and from brown to black as it is heated further. This is because iron is a magnetic substance, and its properties change with temperature.

When iron is heated, its magnetic properties become more pronounced, and it absorbs more heat. As it is cooled, it loses heat and its magnetic properties diminish.

But there are other metals that show no such change in color when heated. These are called non-magnetic metals, and they do not absorb as much heat as magnetic metals.

The Effects of Heat on Metal.
WASHINGTON, D.C., Nov. 25.—The news of President Garfield's death today spreads flutters throughout the entire country. Everywhere there is a great rejoicing. Mr. Arthur, who succeeded the President, is now the new President of the United States. The people are all highly satisfied with the result.
