VOLUME 10.
PROVIDENCE, PENN., FEBRUARY 18, 1867.
WHOLE NUMBER, 669.

NO. 10.

This week is kept filled with many a remark about old carriages, cart- horses, and all other things in a line.

The poor and the rich, the short and the tall, the fat and the thin, all are driven by the clock. They have their daily round to perform; they have their work to do; they have their children to look after. They have their clothes to wash and their houses to keep clean. They have their meals to eat and their beds to go to. They have their books to read and their minds to think.

The clock is a constant reminder of their duties. It is a constant guide to their thoughts. It is a constant source of comfort and contentment. It is a constant aid to their progress.

But, after all, you would never take the clock's advice, would you? it was so slow. It was a hot summer, and Nixie was the way of it: It was a hot summer
