2-24-1997

The Grizzly, February 24, 1997

Jared Rakes
Ursinus College

Kristen Calore
Ursinus College

Melissa Forbes
Ursinus College

Tim McCoy
Ursinus College

Teresa Green
Ursinus College

See next page for additional authors

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.ursinus.edu/grizzlynews

Part of the Cultural History Commons, Higher Education Commons, Liberal Studies Commons, Social History Commons, and the United States History Commons

Click here to let us know how access to this document benefits you.

Recommended Citation

Rakes, Jared; Calore, Kristen; Forbes, Melissa; McCoy, Tim; Green, Teresa; Oldrati, Lori; Stamps, Daneen; White, Andrew; Tiggett, Tarika; Kurtz, Angie; Campbell, Sean; Podgorski, Mike; Fawcett, Faith; Schofer, Joel; Murnane, Tricia; Daniluk, Chris; and Walker, Hera, "The Grizzly, February 24, 1997" (1997). Ursinus College Grizzly Newspaper. 398.
https://digitalcommons.ursinus.edu/grizzlynews/398

This Book is brought to you for free and open access by the Newspapers at Digital Commons @ Ursinus College. It has been accepted for inclusion in Ursinus College Grizzly Newspaper by an authorized administrator of Digital Commons @ Ursinus College. For more information, please contact aprock@ursinus.edu.
Authors
Jared Rakes, Kristen Calore, Melissa Forbes, Tim McCoy, Teresa Green, Lori Oldrati, Daneen Stamps, Andrew White, Tarika Tiggett, Angie Kurtz, Sean Campbell, Mike Podgorski, Faith Fawcett, Joel Schofer, Tricia Murnane, Chris Daniluk, and Hera Walker

This book is available at Digital Commons @ Ursinus College: https://digitalcommons.ursinus.edu/grizzlynews/398
The research uses xenon because it is easy to study and acts as a sort of probe, Gaede said. A membrane model, which is used instead of a real cell membrane, is exposed to prepared xenon. The laser is used to prepare xenon, through laser polarization, to make it more sensitive to Nuclear Magnetic Resonance (NMR), which can detect xenon, said Gaede.

The NMR equipment has been ordered by the school. Its cost of $250,000 came from a different grant. "The equipment can be used by everyone in the science department," Tom Malia, an Ursinus sophomore chemistry major, is helping Gaede to prepare the membranes. Gaede will need more students to assist in her research for the next two summers, she said. She asks that any Ursinus student who is a sophomore or above, and is interested in working with her during the summer, contact her at extension 2346.

Dr. Gaede Receives $28,500 Grant

by Melissa Forbes
Opinions Editor

Dr. Holly Gaede, assistant professor of chemistry, received a $28,500 Research Corporation Cotrell College Science Grant. A portion of the grant money will be used to buy a laser that assists in Gaede’s research on the molecular mechanism of anesthesia. Her research deals with discovering where anesthesia works in the cell. Gaede’s research is unique because of her use of the laser. Its ability to make xenon, a simple anesthetic, more sensitive makes her research different from other scientists’ research.

“The research will determine exactly where anesthesia works in a cell. This information can later be used to discover how anesthesia works on a cell,” Gaede said.

Organist and Dancer to Perform at Ursinus

by Kristen Calore
Special to The Grizzly

Prize-winning organist and Philadelphia native Marvin Mills performed in a Heefner Organ Recital Series concert on Sunday, Feb. 23, 1997, at 4 p.m. in Bomberger Auditorium. Admission to the series is free, and no reservations are required.

Featured in the program were Calvin Hampton’s “Five Dances,” with dance performances by Glendola Mills. Glendola Mills used the Umfundalai African Dance Technique, created by Dr. Kariamu Welsh Asante in 1971, as a source and inspiration to capture the essence of Hampton’s work.

Marvin also performed from the works of Dupre, Corigliano, Greenlee, Handel and Jongen.

Marvin Mills began studying the organ at age 14, and attended the Philadelphia Settlement Music School as a scholarship student. He went on to study at Westminster Choir College, and was a prize winner in the Alexander McCurdy Organ Competition. He has performed throughout the eastern United States in such places as The Academy of Music, Philadelphia, The Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts, The Barns and Wolf Trap Farm Park as well as in historic churches in Krakow, Poland.

Marvin Mills has recorded the “Concerto for Organ, Strings and Timpani” by Francis Poulenc and a digital recording entitled “Organ Music from All Souls Church” for PBS television.

Marvin Mills is a member of the National Association of Negro Musicians. He is also a former board member of the Unitarian/Universalist Musician’s Network and has served as dean of the District of Columbia Chapter of the American Guild of Organists. He is currently director of music and organist at All Souls Church, Unitarian, Washington, D.C.

The Heefner Organ Recital Series is supported by a gift from Bucks County attorney William F. Heefner, a 1942 graduate of Ursinus College, who is President of the Board of Directors. As a student, he was a college organist. Installed in 1986, the Heefner Organ has 3,593 pipes in 62 ranks, three manuals and 77 stops. The organ was built by Austin Organs, Inc. of Hartford, Conn., and was a gift of Heefner’s mother, the late Mrs. Lydia V. Heefner, given in memory of her husband, Russell E. Heefner.

In The News...

by Teresa Green
Copy Editor

INTERNATIONAL

Former Mexican President Carlos Salinas de Gortari, and his oldest brother, Raul, have adamantly denied charges made by witnesses in a Houston court that they were involved with major traffickers. American prosecutors, however, intend to show that they are lying by providing evidence that links Raul as to numerous narcotics dealers.

Secretary of State Madeleine K.

Dr. Goetz to Lecture

by Tim McCoy
News Editor

Dr. Stewart Goetz, associate professor of philosophy, will present a William Wilson Baden Faculty Lecture entitled “John Searle: Dualism and Free Will” on Thursday, Feb. 27, at 4:15 p.m. in Olin 108.

John Searle is a professor of Philosophy at UC Berkeley and is active in questions about what the self is, whether that self is free to make choices, and how we view the self in light of our increased knowledge from modern science.

Searle claims that many modern views of the self are obviously false and that one wonders why people suggest they are true. Searle says the reason why these views are taken seriously is that their proponents are afraid of the truth of mind-body dualism.

Goetz believes that Searle has also fallen prey to this and that his own views come out of fear of dualism. Goetz says that Searle denies free will because it requires dualism. Therefore his own view of the mind is deterministic because he is afraid of dualism.

For a clearer explanation of all of this and its ramifications, attend Dr. Goetz’s lecture. For further incentive, refreshments will be served at 4 p.m. in Olin Faculty Commons (Olin 104).

One is still what one is going to cease to be and already what one is going to become. One lives one’s death, one dies one’s life.

—Jean-Paul Sartre

Albright began her world tour earlier last week; she visited with Chancellor Helmut Kohl and Foreign Minister Klaus Kinkel of Germany before going to Paris to meet with the French Foreign Minister Herve de Charette. Ms. Albright and the French Foreign Minister pronounced a truce in the sometimes strained French-American relationship.

A Peruvian newspaper published details of a secret Government plan to rescue the seventy-two hostages still being held in the Japanese Embassy residence in Lima. Officials have confirmed the plan; however, they have expressed hope that this crisis will somehow be resolved without force.

The first woman in New York State ever to be granted clemency after being convicted of killing the man who beat her was freed earlier this year. She has said that being free is both “scary” and “delicious.” The woman, Charline Brundidge, was convicted in 1985 for killing her husband. She was freed three weeks ago and is already working two jobs, one of which she counsels battered women.

Whitewater Prosecutor Kenneth W. Starr announced that he was planning to leave the position to become dean of the law and public policy schools at Pepperdine University. Mr. Starr and his aides have indicated that the resignation of Mr. Starr in no way indicates that the investigation is close to over.

Jeanie Montavlos, one of the two female cadets who dropped out of the Citadel in January, described her experience at the school as “terrible.” She told of a build-up of humiliation which led to the physical and mental abuse of herself and another female cadet, Kim Messer. She also said that the humiliation progressed to the point where she and Ms. Messer were kicked numerous times in the room of a top-ranking cadet. No formal charges have been made against the cadet or anyone accused of participating in this activity yet. (Information taken from The New York Times)
Greek Life Discussion at Common Hour

by Lori Oldrati
Special to The Grizzly

A discussion was held about "Greek Life at Ursinus" on Wednesday, February 19 during common hour. Led by Gary Bonas, the head of Leadership Development and Greek Affairs at Villanova University, the meeting covered several main points of Greek life using student participation and activities.

Enthusiastic about Greek life, Bonas talked about how he has liked all of the Greeks that he has worked with, and felt that they were considerate, thoughtful, and pleasant to be with. He also stated that he is committed to Greek life and wants it to continue into the next century. To achieve these goals, he said that there have to be a lot of changes made. Bonas wasn't sure about how Greek life works at Ursinus, but he said that he does know what is happening around the country.

Comparing Greek organizations to the dinosaurs, he talked about how the world was changing around the dinosaurs but the dinosaurs weren't changing. This is the reason why the dinosaurs are extinct, he said.

When asked about how Greek life at Ursinus compares to other colleges, McKinney said, "There are a lot of differences between other colleges and Ursinus. Other schools are not as Greek oriented as we are. Here, Greek life makes up a large amount of the perce­ption of the institution held by the faculty, staff, and the students. Plus, everyone you talk to seems to have an attitude or opinion about Greek life."

McKinney went on to say, "We're trying to get general discussions about Greek Life meant for the students to interact with professionals from other institutions and organizations.

Last week's discussion dealt with pledging do's and don'ts, and how the rest of the Greek world perceives the practices we really engage in. Today's meeting was more about where Greek life is going. If groups want to be here at Ursinus College ten to twenty years down the road things are going to have to change such as the practices of uniforms, carrying buckets, and theme days.

The next discussion will be held on Wednesday, February 26 at 7PM in Olin auditorium. Judge Mitch Crane will be talking about "Risk Management."
Do you . . .

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Like to talk on the phone?</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Want to speak with Ursinus alumni about their experiences after graduation?</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Want to earn up to $6.50 an hour plus prizes?</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>

If you answered yes to all three questions, then you should work for Ursinus College’s Spring ‘97 Phone-a-thon!

Join your fellow students and call Ursinus alumni and friends for donations to the Annual Fund Campaign.

Call Joshua Liss at x2332 or (610) 409-3588 for more information and to schedule an interview.

Please Note:

The Phone-a-thon will be held in Pfahler Hall from Tuesday, March 18 to Thursday, April 17, on Sunday through Thursday evenings, 5:30 to 9:00 p.m.

Callers will be required to work a minimum of 2 nights per week.

Prizes and other incentives will be awarded nightly based on attendance and performance!
Things That Make Me Go Hmmm...

by Tarika Tiggett
of The Grizzly

I spend a great deal of my time wondering about many things that puzzle me. My thoughts range from the trivial: “What is the point of wearing gloves when you only have on shorts and a tee shirt?” to the complex: “Why is there such apathy on campus?”

The latter question is the more puzzling. There are so many opportunities offered to the students on campus. This campus offers countless clubs and organizations, trips, and entertainment, but to no avail. Don’t get me wrong, there are a select few students who are active, interested, and participate, but they are not the majority.

Is it that students are in their rooms studying day in and day out, non-stop, and even every weekend? I doubt it. If that were the case, Reimert would be a ghost-town. Maybe the students are not aware of the activities. No, there are always colorful fliers and posters plaguing Wismer and other campus buildings. It could be that the students here are simply not interested in life outside of their own little glass bubble. This is the most obvious reason I have come up with.

Diversity Week is a prime example of the apathy on campus. The activities covered the gambit of social expression from theater (Womyn With Wings), to open discussion (Diversity Forum), to musical interludes (Jazz Ensemble) and much more. These events did not have as high a turn out as one would expect. Issues involving diversity always seem to have an even lower turn out than other campus activities. I wonder if that’s because the majority of people on this campus are comfortable, and indifferent to campus improvement. Does anybody have any answers? I have just about exhausted all the possibilities.

Things do not have to be this way; it’s not too late. Get involved! Wake up Urnus! In this case it is not necessarily what you can do for your campus, it is what your campus can do for you!

Of course leaders are always needed. If you do not appreciate the activities on campus, do not complain; come out with suggestions. By at least trying new things to broaden your horizons you become more well rounded.

To start, I would like to invite you to S.U.N., Sankofa Umoja Nia, which means “searching for the roots of himself and purpose.” It is an organization that promotes awareness of African-American culture. We meet every Wednesday at 6:00 p.m. in Wismer Parent’s Lounge. All are welcome so come out and see what we are about!

A Non-Greek Speaks Back

by Mike Podgorski
of The Grizzly

Last week’s issue of the Grizzly presented an article by Sean Campbell entitled “Greek Speaks Out.” I feel there exist some inaccuracies that I need to correct. In my last article on pledging, I presented an article by an anonymous writer for Greek Speaks Out. I am correcting these inaccuracies in order to give his audience a more informed view on the subjects Sean covered.

Just as Sean was at the meeting when Jared Rakes, the editor of the Grizzly, asked for an article concerning pledging, so was I. When Sean states that “no one took the assignment,” I have to ask him to look at page six of last week’s Grizzly where my article on pledging was printed. When Jared asked for an article, any article concerning pledging, somebody actually did respond—me. I find it mildly interesting that Sean said that no one took the assignment when my article was in the very same issue as Sean’s. I’m not sure if Sean didn’t hear me or couldn’t remember that I had said I could write something about pledging or what.

There is another piece of information that is incorrect. As Sean stated in his article, “if someone wrote a news article that was unbiased and about what pledging is, there would have been no problem.” I’m not sure if Sean forgot this also, but one of the Grizzly writers expressed her opinion that, in her personal experience, it doesn’t matter what one writes about or how one writes, social retribution is almost necessary a consequence.

Social retribution is a legitimate fear among students. I was informed recently by a security officer that one of the R.A.’s who was mentioned in one of the security reports I covered in the last issue of the Grizzly was concerned that she would suffer some kind of social retribution because she was the one who reported suspicious pledging activities about a fraternity. Although her/his name was not even stated in the article, this R.A. felt that the fraternity involved might be able to discern the identity of him/her. Exactly how far does this fear run when a student whose name is not even stated fears that some sort of social retribution will be inflicted upon her/him? I can only conjecture that Sean is less informed than he would lead his audience to believe.

Still, another inaccuracy in Sean’s article needs to be corrected. Dr. Kelley did not make a “presupposition on how the Greeks would react to an article about pledging,” but rather, she was expressing a legitimate concern of writers and students in general who express their opinions. I have been concerned myself that the article I wrote about pledging or fraternities or sororities might bring me some sort of social retribution. My concern for the issue Sean has raised is as follows: I think making a statement such as “This (Dr. Kelley’s presumption) would seem to indicate that she thinks the only way to report on pledging is with a negative slant (anti-Greek)” is in fact, an ungrounded presumption on Sean’s part. These types of inferences by writers provide the basis for huge misunderstandings between faculty and students. I think it a great disservice to Sean to the community to foster such dangerous misunderstandings. Sean has a responsibility to inform his audience as truthfully as possible.

Moreover, I find it just a bit preposterous that he should attempt to speak for the Greek community as a whole. A statement like “The Greeks as a whole sometimes feel no support from the faculty and even the administration for what they stand for” is grossly presumptuous. I hope next time Sean will consider reflecting upon his effect on his audience before he makes such blanket statements. Also, forgive me if I am a bit picky here, but to describe an attitude towards non-Greeks as “racism” is an inaccurate use of the term.

Letters from Great Britain

by Angie Kurtz
Special to The Grizzly

On an excursion to Fareham, England two weeks ago, my overly enthusiastic coach driver made a comment to me that Great Britain and the US are two countries separated by the same language. As a polite tourist, I just nodded my head, but actually questioned his remark for the entire ride. Here, at the conclusion of my third week as a study abroad student, I think I’ve finally deciphered his puzzling statement. My first inkling came when my host father in Fareham offered to knock me up at 10 AM the following morning before leaving for work! I looked at him, horrified and confused. Luckily he simply meant that he would knock on my door in order to wake me in time to meet up with my mates.

After a full week back in London, other language differences became apparent to me as well. A fellow house mate of mine was in search of a funny pack in order to keep her wallet, tube pass, and other essentials organized and in sight at all times. She soon learned that a funny pack is quite a vulgar, sexual term here in England. Use your imagination and you’ll start to call it a bum-bag like the rest of the Brits!

Also, when a British friend told me he’d give me a ring on Saturday, he had no intentions of proposing—he simply wanted to make plans. When we all met at the pub that night, all the Brits kept telling me how pissed they were. I soon figured out that being ‘pissed’ here has quite a positive meaning as they threw back countless pints of Guinness.

I find that every day other subtle differences between “American English” and “British English” make their way into my conversations. I guess the coach driver was right. Great Britain and the US are indeed separated by the same language, but they do have other cultural differences as well. I hope to shed light upon some of these differences throughout my semester here in London.

Until next time...here’s something to ponder: An older British bloke told me that he felt that Americans know nothing but their own country and believe that the world revolves around them. I tried to disagree with him until he came up with a very simple yet perfect example. The championship of America’s favorite past time is called the World Series, but only American teams are involved in the competition.

Furthermore, I cannot fathom how Sean can use the word “we” when speaking for the Greeks. Either Sean is a schizophrenic when he says “we,” or again, he speaks for a large number of people on campus who do not have (as far as I can tell) elected him as their official voice for the college community. I think that after years of nonsense from the institution of fraternities and sororities on this campus, I too would be somewhat un-willing to help or trust such an institution. I don’t find it any wonder that I cannot take Sean seriously at the moment because of all the nonsense in the past and I should think that he would realize this.

Finally, stating “come to a XPY party” if “those of you non-greeks... feel ostracized by writing an anti-greek article” is not a cure for the disease, but only a temporary solution for the symptom. All I can say is, patience, my friend, patience.
Go Out and Do Something
by Andrew White
Special to The Grizzly

It's a Friday night at Ursinus and you are sitting in your dorm room drinking some beer with your friends. The posters on the wall are placed just right, the lava lamp in the corner is slowly tranquillizing its audience, and the stereo has not produced a bad song yet. The ambiance is perfect. No one has to get up for anything, except maybe to grab another beer or use the bathroom.

Conversation consists mainly of "how cool" a certain tune is, without any discussion of why that song is "cool." Everyone is just content to "be," and any trace of original or creative thought has pretty much vanished. I think, as my good pal Beavis might put it, "This sucks."

After spending two years at Ursinus, I am finally able to find a new vantage point that enables me to look back to my freshman and sophomore years. I view these years as time spent idling, like a car wasting gas in a crowded parking lot. It is so easy to slip into the above mentioned situation, where you are content to just get by with passing grades and have a good time with it as well.

The hard part deals with realizing the mode you have slipped into, and the hardest part is working your way out of this situation.

I have taken a number of courses here at Ursinus, but not until now did I realize the amount of information I had my hands on and at the time overlooked. I was too involved with the social aspects of the campus and too content with the microcosm of apathy that I had produced.

There are plenty of freshmen, sophomores, juniors, and even seniors who are just floating through their courses without taking full advantage of a liberal arts education. It may be hard to realize this now, especially as a freshman or sophomore, but I urge you to get off your butt and find an interest in your course of study.

Even if you can not depend on your choice of major as an outlet for your passion, try to find some sort of creative process to occupy your time.

For example, I am currently taking photography, a course offered at Ursinus and I am finding it quite interesting. It allows me to balance all of my left-brained, logical thought requiring courses with a right-brained, creative course. It is good to have a system of checks and balances in the human psyche.

My point is that no matter what year you are at Ursinus, you should be exploring your interests (and dislikes for that matter), and making a conscious effort to explore these interests. If you just sit around in your dorm room thinking about nothing, nothing will come of it. Do not become caught in the cycle—go out and do something!

Politicians' Greed Outweighs Desires of Constituents
by Sean Campbell
of The Grizzly

During this past election campaign, the cry for reform went out to both parties. The people were tired of seeing money-grubbing politicians selling their votes to get more money for their campaigns. At the end of the elections, both parties were under investigation for violations of campaign funding laws—we had foreign interest groups giving money to our candidates.

Whether it is legal to accept money from foreign parties is not the question here. The question is, why are the people that we elect into office not doing anything about this? There are investigations into both the Republicans and the Democrats. They both have admitted their guilt with regard to how they have gotten their money. And still, nothing is done.

Actually, a lot is being done. There are hearings going on; there are investigations going on; there is a lot of finger pointing going on. But none of it seems to be getting us closer to campaign finance reform.

With the cost of a successful campaign skyrocketing, politicians and those wanting to be politicians need to find money. The cost of TV ads, radio time, and the other costs of campaigns are constantly on the rise. Those politicians in power are very reluctant to cut off their cash flow.

What can be done to fix this? Is there a method that will make this work fairly for both parties without giving the edge to one or another? How can we make them responsible to us? I have a wacky idea. Why not put all campaign money into one big pot?

Would this be a success or failure? Would both Republican or for Democrat, nor independent. When the election time comes around, the money is equally divided up between however many candidates there are. There would be separate funds for the House, the Senate, and the President.

This change would satisfy the constituents' needs because there are no personal favors owed for money given directly to a candidate. This would also satisfy the people who donate money because they could cover both their bets with either the Republican or the Democrat winning. It would seem to be a perfect plan.

However, it unfortunately would not be. Because it would be so even, there would be no advantage to either party. They may even lose money. Our politicians would not vote for this because they would lose their advantage and direct patronization. They would lose their perks and the benefits of being able to sell their votes.

So we will probably suffer through many lamentations by politicians of how the system does not work. We will suffer through endless hearings and investigations. All to no avail.

We will just have to keep pushing and make them realize that they are responsible to us, the constituents.
When Johnny comes marching home...

Last week, The Silver Screen brought you two prison-camp war movies. Keeping with the war theme, this week is dedicated to the soldiers who returned home. After any war, many soldiers find it difficult to return to a normal life. Many veterans had physical wounds; some emotional ones. The Best Years of Our Lives, Samuel Goldwyn's crowning masterpiece, was inspired by a Life magazine article about WWII veterans' difficulties in adjusting to civilian life. When asked about the film, the producer reportedly stated, "I don't care if it doesn't make a nickel. I just want every man, woman, and child to see it." And see it you must.

The plot revolves around three returning veterans played by Fredric March, Dana Andrews and Harold Russell. Harold Russell, whose role was based on his own real life story, is a seaman whose arms were blown off up to the elbow. When he returns home to his family and fiancée, he finds it hard to handle their reaction. Dana Andrews' character, married to a flighty, carefree nightclub performer, can't find a decent job to support his wife in the style to which she is accustomed. To make matters worse, Andrews falls in love with Peggy Stephenson (Teresa Wright), Fredric March's daughter. Fredric March returns to his loving wife and children. Everything seems perfect except March's little drinking problem. It is hard to do justice to this film in such a short article. The plot contains too many intricate details and powerful emotional scenes that one just has to see the film to appreciate it. I never get tired of watching it.

Even in peacetime, many soldiers find it easy to relate to the film's various plots. This is definitely one of the greatest films ever made. The film won the Oscar in 1946 for Best Picture, Fredric March won for Best Actor, and Harold Russell received two Oscars for best supporting actor, one with hands and another with hooks. A few years ago, Russell auctioned off the regular Oscar, and the Academy of Motion Pictures and Arts took him to court, claiming that the Oscar was the property of the Academy. The court ruled in favor of Russell. He did earn it.

Show Your Support During Sexual Assault Awareness Week
February 24-28, 1997

Two highlights of the week are a film and a presentation by the sexual assault awareness group "Outspoken Productions." The film is an R-rated independent feature film and is entitled "A Reason to Believe." It is to be shown at 7:00 p.m. on Monday Night in Olin Auditorium.

A four-person student education group will present a play, Thursday at 7:00 p.m. in Olin Aud. The play, entitled "Drawing the Shades," offers diverse perspectives on sexual assault.

Sponsored by Students and Teachers against Rape (STAR)
Sexual Assault Awareness Week: Feb. 24-28

S.T.A.R., Students and Teachers against Rape, is sponsoring Sexual Assault Awareness Week.

We hope to inform the Ursinus community about sexual assault, especially its prevalence on college campuses.

RAD (Rape Aggressive Defense) begins at 7:00 p.m. in Helferrich rm. 211 for those preregistered.

If you missed the opportunity to take this self defense course for women only, look for it to be offered again next fall.

See page 6 for other related events, and come out for them. You'll find that sexual assault affects more than just its victims; it affects all of us. Even here at Ursinus.

A PHILLY FAN

by Joel Schofer
Sports Editor

I have got so much to write about that I don’t even know where to start. There is something going on with every professional team in Philadelphia! Hell, the Phillies now have someone who can hit the ball out of the infield; the Eagles lost a center and are after one; the Ursinus wrestling team has a someone going to nationals; the Flyers goalie decided to take a nap; and the Sixers... well... they still suck.

The Phillies finally found the cleanup hitter they so desperately needed when they signed right fielder Danny Tartabull to a one year, $2.3 million contract.

Tartabull, who hit 27 home runs and drove in 101 runs with the Chicago White Sox, made over $5 million last season and, until this week, was unwilling to accept anything less.

However, with spring training beginning and only two offers on Mr. Tartabull’s table, $2 million from the Phillies and $500,000 plus incentives from the Cincinnat Reds, Tartabull began to reconsider the Phillies’ offer and general manager Lee Thomas began to sweeten it.

The terms of Tartabull’s contract have not all been released, but it’s rumored that Tartabull is scheduled to receive one Twinkie for every plate appearance over 25 and has been promised a place in the starting rotation after pitchers Tyler Greene, Curt Schilling, and Mike Grace tear their rotator cuffs in the first week of spring training. Tartabull’s contract also includes a no-trade clause and a no-wrestle-Darren Torsone clause.

Tartabull, no matter what the circumstances, will not have to wrestle Ursinus regional 118 pound wrestling champion Darren Torsone. The Cincinnati Reds were not willing to make such a guarantee, and it is believed that this is what brought Tartabull to the Phillies.

Tartabull, in all seriousness, is one hell of a signing for only $2.3 million. He’ll hit, at minimum, 25 home runs, which you can’t say about anyone else on the team, and if he drives in fewer than 90 runs then the average on the first genetics test wasn’t a 75. Hmmm... Lee Thomas actually did a good thing, for once.

One other thing has already happened at spring training; Darren Daulton has, after one day, switched positions again. He is no longer a fully functional catcher, but is instead a non-functional first baseman who will NEVER beat out Rico Brogna.

Daulton is done, cooked, finished. If he were a Purdue oven stuffer roaster his built-in thermometer would have popped long ago. He’s burnt to a crisp and the only place he’s got a job is as a designated hitter in the American league. Now the hell am I still in Pennsylvania? The hell am I still in Pennsylvania?

The Eagles (yes, you are reading about the Eagles in my column) the 14-39 on his lack of coaching ability, Johnny Davis is not fired. I’m just sick and tired of seeing coaches take the fall time and time again when a team just out and out blows.

Johnny Davis knows his basketball or else he wouldn’t be in the position he is now. Could the Sixers’ losing ways be due to the fact that Coach Davis has only six legitimate NBA quality players on his entire roster, two of whom are either first or second year players?

People are too quick to forget that this is a rebuilding process that is going to take at least three years, with this being the first of those three. Give Davis the time he deserves, and some players to coach and then if the Sixers are still the Sicksters we can call for his head.
TORSONE WINS 118-POUND REGIONAL TITLE
Advances to NCAA Division III Nationals

Ursinus senior Darren Torson won the 118-pound title at the NCAA Division III East Regional Championships hosted by Kings College. Torson became the first Ursinus wrestler to capture an individual championship in the event's four-year history.

Torson beat two of the nation's top-ranked wrestlers in the tournament. He decisioned 6th-ranked Jerry Boyland of Lycoming, 4-2, in the semifinals.

The host Blue Bombers won the 118-pound match, Torson had a 5-2 decision over fifth-ranked Jeremy Myers of Messiah, the tournament's top seed.

In the championship match, he earned a 5-2 decision over fifth-ranked Jeremy Myers of Messiah, the tournament's top seed.

Torson also had three fourth-place finishers — Tom Guzzo at 134 pounds, Donny Asper at 158 pounds, and Nate McElhaney at 167 pounds.

Eric Trimmer placed fifth at 190 pounds, while Bucky Johnson was sixth at 126 pounds.

LARKIN HONORED TWICE
Dorsey Garners Rookie Honors

Ursinus College junior guard/forward Megan Larkin was named the Centennial Conference women's basketball Co-Player of the Week for the period ending February 15.

During the Bears' 3-0 week, Larkin averaged 23 points, nine rebounds, 2.6 assists, and 3.0 steals per game. Larkin shot 36.8 percent from the field for the week, including an impressive 73.3 percent (8 of 11) from behind the three-point arc. She scored a career-best 34 points in a 71-50 win at Bryn Mawr on February 11.

Larkin was also named the ECAC/Holiday Inn Division III South Player Of The Week, while teammate Lauren Dorsey was named the organization's Rookie of the Week.

Dorsey averaged 14.7 points, 10.6 rebounds, one assist, and 6.3 blocks per game. She scored a career-best 18 points in a 71-50 win over Moravian on February 13. Dorsey leads the Bears with an Ursinus-record 79 blocks this season.

GYMNASTS PLACE THIRD AT ITHACA INVITATIONAL

The Ursinus women's gymnastics team placed third at the Ithaca College Invitational on Saturday. The host Blue Bombers won the meet with 181.525 points. SUNY-Cortland was second with 177.65, while Ursinus scored 172.025.

Jennifer Courtney placed second in the floor exercise with a 9.40. Carrie Luka was fifth with a 9.175. Courtney and Angela Mullan finished fourth and fifth, respectively, in the all-around competition. Courtney scored 34.775, while Mullan posted a 34.50.

SPORTS
WOMEN'S BASKETBALL DROPS TWO IN A ROW

Travel to Hopkins for Playoffs

Ursinus (16-8, 11-4) let an 11 point halftime lead slip away Saturday and lost to Muhlenberg, 69-79, in a Centennial Conference Eastern Division game.

Muhlenberg (16-7, 13-2) shot just 21 percent from the floor in the first half and fell behind 33-22 at the intermission. The Mules, however, shot over 58 percent in the second half.

Amy Sandt led the Mules with a game-best 21 points. Sarah Clarke added 17.

Megan Larkin led Ursinus with 20 points, while Lauren Dorsey scored 10. Both Larkin and Dorsey grabbed a game-best 11 rebounds each.

On Tuesday Ursinus was upset by host Washington College, 48-45, in a key Centennial Conference Eastern Division game.

Kathleen Farrell led Ursinus with a game-high 13 points. She was the only player on either team to score in double figures. Larkin grabbed a game-best 14 rebounds. Ursinus shot just 23.3 percent from the floor, including only 5.9 percent (1 of 17) from three-point range. Dorsey blocked a Centennial Conference record nine shots, to give her an Ursinus record 79 on the season.

Ursinus will travel to Baltimore Wednesday to face defending CC champion Johns Hopkins in the first round of the playoffs.

BUYSE SCORES 1,000TH POINT
Finishes Career With 1,032

by Chris Daniluk
Of The Grizzly

Pat Buyse scored a game-high 20 points to lead host Ursinus to a 73-63 Centennial Conference win over Gettysburg. Out of Buyse's 20 points, 14 came in the first half, with the most important one, number 1,000, coming as the first field goal in the second half.

With 19:35 to play in the second half, Buyse took a pass in the lane from Jim Rossiter and went up strong for two. The game was stopped as the crowd gave him a standing ovation for the next five minutes.

After the brief stoppage, play resumed, and the Bears tried to build on their 37-26 halftime lead. It was a much closer game than the final score reflected, as the Bulldogs had the margin down to three points at 43-40 with 14:30 left to play.

The rest of the game was one of runs, as the Bears went on a 14-4 run to take a 57-44 lead with 7:44 remaining. Then, it was Gettysburg's turn, as they closed the gap to five points at 61-56, with 3:45 left.

That is the closest that they would get, though, as the Bears went on to win their third conference game of the season. Along with Buyse's 20 points, he grabbed eight rebounds. Jim added 12 points and six assists, while Ryan Costello had 11 off of the bench.

On Saturday night against Muhlenberg, the Bears saw their season come to an end with a hard fought 68-66 loss. The game was a battle the whole way, as the game contained many hard fouls, along with strong inside play.

The Bears, who lead for most of the first half, found themselves down by one at halftime after the Mules hit a three pointer at the buzzer to take a 34-33 halftime lead.

The second half was much of the same, as the lead and momentum switched many times. Every time down the court, each shot and point was earned, but no point was awarded, follow-up dunk by Kevin Thompson to put the Bears up by two, at 44-42, with 7:36 left to play. The game would go back and forth all the way down to the waning seconds of the game as the Mules earned not only the win, but a trip to the conference playoffs, by a final score of 66-68.

Pat Buyse ended his illustrious four year career with a game high 27 points and eight rebounds. Kevin Thompson also scored in double figures with 10 points while grabbing six rebounds. Brad Martin, who scored 11 points, Jim, who had nine points and six rebounds, and Rob Bishop, who had four assists, all showed promise for the future.

Once again, congratulations to Pat Buyse for an excellent career. He became the school's 13th 1,000 point scorer, and 11th overall with 1,032. He also became the first Ursinus player ever to lead the conference in scoring with a 20 point per game average.