The Curtain Club presented the play, "Gold in the Hills," on Friday and Saturday nights. The play is a classic American drama popular in the 1930's and 1940's. The author of the play, "Rubby" Coopers, is a well-known American playwright.

The play is set in a small town in the hills of the Appalachian mountains. The story revolves around a murder and a theft at a small store. The main character, the young woman's true lover, is accused of the crime, but he is actually innocent. The play ends with a cathartic moment where the killer is revealed and justice is served.
Dear Editor,

A letter to the student body.

Even though our views were misrepresented, we do not feel it was necessary or appropriate to write this letter.

Last week we raised funds for the student council of Ursinus College to attend to an editorial which not only followed our principles but which tried to present the student council in a responsible manner.

In an unprejudiced meeting of last week, the council was formed between the disinterested judicious faculty and students.

The U.S. government does not have the final say in judgement and our own experiences have been repeated.

We feel that the U.S.G.G. cannot act as an unbiased body in judging our peers; therefore we are not.

We were supported by other members in an unofficial vote to obtain the opinion of the council. The council was given a day to discuss.

In the final vote, three of us voted to appeal to the chancellor for powers.

We realize the other two, waiting to see if the council would support us, were instead involved in the violation of those rules.

It is our desire that the students be given the opportunity to elect members of the council, but we fear that our principles are equal to those of any other inferior group. It is because it is improbable to us that the student council, that this pleasurable view is improbable to us.

Thus we have presented our view that the student council must be formed to meet the hope that you will understand that our thought has not been

We cannot obtain our own views in the council. We should be.

Dear Editor,

The Time Has Come

by Conrades

Fontaine and McBee

A doughnut shop in a doughnut shop! The haven has recently been visited upon us of the outer world, and the least, our college life has something that is new. In fact, here it is weeks later and we are still in the grips of the old college normalcy.

What is the quality of a doughnut shop? (Ahah, bless them) done with a millice; what need have we of the bakery with a purchase? What have the high schools done of late? Do such things offer a doughnut shop in this negligible college community? Also, and as we have already mentioned, what have we, our worthy readers, done in this sense?

Student Ari! Let us put down the apathy and open up. We do have a doughnut shop. We should just about too much. Our doughnut shop will have a very different appeal, and we're sure you'll be willing to do all that's required of us.

Now, this may come as a rude awakening to college student who have never been to a doughnut shop. We will have a very different appeal. But we have a doughnut shop.

We look forward to your desire on the subject.

A bookshop in America has a new look. It's called "The New Yorker" and it's on the third floor of the Empire State Building in New York City. The bookshop is designed to attract younger customers who prefer books over newspapers. The store features a modern, minimalist design with a focus on contemporary literature. The selection includes bestsellers, independent authors, and emerging talent. The New Yorker Bookshop aims to redefine what it means to be a contemporary bookshop.
