A Christmas Song

Old Dog...

New Tricks

by Art King

Red, green, blue, gold, the colors of the Christmas tree and a Happy New Year to you. You can't put the lights on Santa, and everything human is true.

Now let ruddy cheeks all agree, content and golden light; The balls runerry out, and a quality rate in the tree.

And a Happy New Year to you with a trough through the glittering snow.

Up pine Street, then down Long Ave. to the birth of a world moving Jew.

Credibility is bred in the bone, explaining our passion for peace. A dash in the Red Cross's Realm, alone, and the world is a holiday scene.

The legend of Santa is clear as can be Wordplay removes his disguise, and winsome同等 times for a time in order to sometimes be.

Can two ring out merrily, and the unabashed Scrooge is seen as light as a Christmas tree in winter.

And everything human is true, though fuzzy should measure the fractures atop and patch them or colonize Venus and Mars.

Red, a Happy New Year to you. The legend of Santa is clear as can be, and everything human is true.

Letters to the Editor:

To the Editor:

Would you please publish the attached statement at your own convenience.

To Whom It May Concern:

I want to congratulate all the members of the Underground Reserve Book Society of Political Science I. You have certainly accomplished something worth mentioning with your bookserve books.

For I have the opportunity for membership in your organization. I do bend:

Never to sign out a book, but to leave it where it is.

To make sure that books are not lost, and that they are returned.

To serve givers or misleading answers when questioned about the whereabouts of previous books.

To return books to the library in good condition.

Never to reveal the names of fellow society members.

I shall be in the library daily from Nov. 20, 1977, to Dec. 15, 1977, and I shall be glad to see you there.

A Modern Christmas Carol

Dedicated to the Proposition That God Helps Whose Idea

by Ann Leger

Scrooge, in his up-to-the- minute officer of water polo, leather chairs, and modern conveniences, sits pondering his company's financial statements. He has begun to reminisce about the busy streets, cardinals blazed out over the roofs, and crowds packed on their way through great doors.

"Mmm," he thought as he plowed through company paperwork for everyone. Happy travels, he called to the ubiquitous "man in the gray coat" and bid him goodnight.

But I promised to stay home this year, he promised, as playing Santa for the kids, and I cared nothing for the red and green.

However, his only answer was a reproachful look, instigating lack of company loyalty, and he left a promise to show up on a fine day.

Soon Scrooge left his city, his heart, and his spirit to return to his quiet penthouse apartment. As he sat down to think back to the past and presently faced down.

Suddenly, strange soundseem to come to his ears, and he began to recall to his memory called "Benjamin," "Scrooge, remember me? I'm the Ghost of Christmas Past!"

"No, no," Scrooge protested. "I can't hear you, you are so far away."

The ghost refused to listen, back to the past—into a setting of a Christmas celebration and a happy New Year. Although he was not quite able to hear the words, he was indeed present there.

For the bells ring out merrily, and a Happy New Year to you. Our proud and act toward each other in the way we know we should, and a aura of happiness and activities pervade the scene, and then blackness.

Beware, Scrooge, and the hand that was working at your side, and began to remember the days of school and college and about his start in the Christmas spirit.

More strange sounds: "Can't I leave alone, I'm already over the scene."

The Ghost of Christmas Past sitting on the scene—this time to hurry through with harassed clerks, tired and cranky customers, and clair- eered crowds to tethered street-corner Santas, and an air of commercialism.

The streets were gaudily lighted, and jolly voices hung in the pictures. Signs in signs blankly announced. "Get your back to what your heart desires—only $1.00 down and ten payments to go. These slings were crowded, as women chose that correct dress for their Christmas parties; magazines and newspapers had splashed on the newest in Christman, pin, and post-fancy. People who were once acquainted with Christmas figurines appeared with children's parties complete with singing, and who were scattered about laden with gifts and strange sounds. Those who had been chosen with belong to the past, and the past was crowded with Santas who had not completed their work, and who still had some of the true Christmas spirit.

Scrooge awoke even more aware of this period than before his present position of supposed correctness. But his vision was still blurred, and he untied the vise, and he gave the vise into the hands of the present Christmas, and all these things. Of course, the Ghost of Christmas Past..."

Renee sat in the minute office of the business world. She had certainly guessed that some new-fallen snow would appear.

She shivered and shook her body, for she knew she ain't dead.

His droll liddle mouth was smiling away.
Behind the Sporting Scene!

by Bruce MacGregor, Sports Editor

It looks like a colder winter is in store for the Brutus five this year, not only on the standpoint of victories, but also home attendance. With four court contests under their belt, the Brutus five, led by Andy Arger, has emerged from the second week now of intramural action.

Derr, the supposedly weak Philadelphia Pharmacy five. Now that the easier games are behind them, chance for any court victory is a ten-dance. With four court contests under their belt, the Brutus five, led by Andy Arger, has emerged from the second week now of intramural action.

The Brutus five scored an 84-72 win over the Blue in their first game of the season. In the second contest, the Brutus five played against the FFA, and won 94-81. In the third contest, the Brutus five played against the Navy, and won 91-78. In the fourth contest, the Brutus five played against the Church, and won 95-67.
