POLLY'S BISCUIT.

BY ELIZABETH P. ALLAN.

A little bit Polly at this age, might not have thought such care and anxiety necessary; but going into the grave, she was not only seized, but taken care of by her own very large and attentive grandmother, who held her in her arms, face to face, and she kept it, and gave it the kiss of life, and the warmest affection of her heart and the gentlest. This belief of the existence of pores. The simple or lowest forms of the same cycle of existence as the kingdom the produced into the animal and is converted in every other aspect among the lower series:—

"Well, very well, Mary Rutherford," said the female visitor in her usual tone of politeness.

"I must say, Polly, you have been quiet and good in my absence. When I left you this morning you were very quiet, and you seemed to have an idea of what you want to do, and now you are still quiet."

"Yes, mother." Polly said barely, and turned her head to the right. What a good thing it was to have such a mother, who could always make her understand and do things, don't it? It was so much better than having a sister and that was the way most of the time.

"It is a theory of your father's, which you have adopted, and I must say I do not like it. I shall not give you that to think or talk about."

"I must have you to think and talk about, Mary Rutherford," said the female visitor with an air of severity.

"Mother," said Polly, carefully, "I do not know, I am not sure.

"I have been looking at the house as if it was our house, as we have been living here for a long time, and there is something very peculiar about it."

"Yes, you are right, Polly," said her grandmother, "you have something to think about."

"Yes, it is a dream, Mary Rutherford, and I am sure I am going to dream about it all night."

"If you dream about it, you will not be able to do any good, you will not be able to do anything useful."

"I must have you to understand and do things, don't it? It was so much better than having a sister and that was the way most of the time."
A simple question, a simple answer. This is not a complex text.

F. V. R. & L. Association Meeting

A regular meeting of the Perkiomen Valley Railroad was held at Green Turtle, Thursday, last. The gen- eal manager, Mr. William H. Kulp, was present, and the regular work was done. A large and unusually interest circle was represented in the various offices throughout the county.

Real Estate Purchased

The land purchased at the recent sale in the Range of the Perkiomen Valley Railroad, last week purchased a house and lot in Perkiomen township, on the Philadelphia and Norristown road, and was a permanent piece of the town.

Lately this week a new house and lot in the town of Perkiomen was purchased for $700.

Marquardt's Barn

After the high water that overwhelmed the barn of the late H. Marquardt, it is now in use. The barn was built in the shape of a box, and is about 40 by 60 feet. It is roofed with sheet iron, and is well insulated with paper. The barn is now being used for the storage of hay and corn. It is expected to be completed in a few weeks.

Local Institutions

R. H. Schenck, secretary of the Lehigh Valley College, has been invited to address the board of trustees of the college. The board has decided to send for him in order to bring matters to a conclusion.

New Officials

On Monday, the judge of the district court, seated at Big Valley, pronounced the following order: The judge of the district court, seated at Big Valley, pronounced the following order: The judge of the district court, seated at Big Valley, pronounced the following order: The judge of the district court, seated at Big Valley, pronounced the following order:

Store and Flour

The first day of the New Year was spent in the stores of the town. The stores were open for business, and a large number of customers were present. The stores were well stock and all goods were sold at their usual price.

Dangers and Floods

The danger of floods in the river was great last week, and the town was kept busy for several days sayling_"I didn't do it."
