TEN YEARS DEAD.

His face was a working day. Day after day the reference department of the Chicago Tribune was the scene of hisusterly. If I may use that word to denote a person who is going about his work with a purpose, a man with a purpose, a purposeal man, a purposeal person, the expression is apt, for so he was. Wherever he went, whatever he did, it was with a purpose, with a purpose to himself, with a purpose to others, with a purpose to the world. His work was his life, and his life was his work. He was a man of middle age, approximately, when I first saw him. He had a thin face, with piercing eyes, and a large, lean mouth. He was always dressed in the same suit of clothes, and he wore a hat of the same color. He was always silent, except when he spoke, and then he spoke with a precision that was almost frightening.

I was engaged to be married to a girl named Mary, who lived in a small town near Chicago. Mary was a sweet, gentle girl, with a kind heart and a gentle manner. She was always ready to help anyone in need, and she was never impatient with anyone who was less fortunate than herself. She was a model of patience and kindness, and I loved her dearly.

But my love for her was not to be. For one day, as I was walking down the street with Mary, I saw a man with a purpose. He was the man of whom I have spoken. He was walking down the street, with a purpose, with a purpose to himself, with a purpose to others, with a purpose to the world. He was always silent, except when he spoke, and then he spoke with a precision that was almost frightening. I was struck by his manner, and I watched him as he walked down the street. I saw that he was a man of purpose, and I knew that he was a man who would do great things. I knew that he was a man who would change the world, and I knew that I must follow him. I went home that day, and I told Mary my story. She was surprised, but she was also happy. She knew that I was a man of purpose, and she knew that I would do great things.

I joined the reference department of the Chicago Tribune, and I worked there with a purpose. I worked with a purpose to myself, with a purpose to others, with a purpose to the world. I worked with a purpose to change the world, and I worked with a purpose to make it a better place. I worked with a purpose, and I knew that Mary would be happy with me.

The reference department of the Chicago Tribune was a place of work, and it was a place where I could work with a purpose. I worked with a purpose to myself, with a purpose to others, with a purpose to the world. I worked with a purpose to change the world, and I worked with a purpose to make it a better place. I worked with a purpose, and I knew that Mary would be happy with me.
