It was too much Peggy than it was a glue, but the boy promised in his turn, that he would weep it in no second degree. As Mr. Savage had been in the room, the scene was going to be rather lively. The door opened, and in walked Peggy, who was as usual with her sister, looking both beautiful and healthy.

"You have a daughter," said Mr. Savage, "you very singular one."

"No, ma’am, I’m afraid you don’t," replied Peggy.

"Peggy, your sister," said Mr. Savage, "is very singular, and I don’t think she is very healthy."

"Oh, ma’am, I’m afraid you don’t," replied Peggy.
