In my article some time ago on the work of the Prohibition Society of Pennsylvania, the most important item was in the final paragraph, which not only struggles for the future but for the present. In their present condition, the Pennsylvania Society has no finances, but with the help of financial friends, they are able to be in evidence more than ever. If they had money to spare, they would be able to do much more. The financial situation is very bad, but the society is in good condition. They have many friends who are willing to help them, and they are able to do much more with the help of financial friends.

The great social problem of to-day is the war on liquor, and the Pennsylvania Society is in the forefront of the battle. They are doing much more than ever before, and they are able to do much more with the help of financial friends.
