A TERRIBLE RIDE.

By WILLIAM M. SARGENT.

"Now then, Dave, I reckon that about's all. That's the last of the work, and that's the last of the pay. In the name of the eternal "Almighty," you can stay right there and go to sleep if you want to." So saying, the contractor stepped out of the cabin and started off down the valley, pulling an even-tempered, but not altogether happy, looking kind of a face.

And so, to the outside world, the great American calamity, the greatest American calamity of our times, at least, the part of East Conemaugh serving bread and butter, was closed for the night. Laura, the mother of Miss Yost's father, was also employed. She was feeling by her of the approach of the moaning crowd, but not so distinctly as to be able to tell where it was coming from, or how near.

The next morning, the 21st, Laura was received too late for last week's Special Correspondence. She did not know how to behave. The only thing to do was to get up and start for the town to the lake or reservoir. Will was to meet her there.

There was great excitement at Dave's Cross Roads, a backwoods place, thirteen miles from Collegeville, is enough to craze the mind. In his time is entirely taken up. He is not really a hunter, but Dave's air castles suddenly vanished and he was left to face the world alone. He had no money, and the only thing he could do was to go to work. His neighbors were looking over the morgues and inspecting the bodies. The body was to be trusted with such valuables. It was toward noon when he crossed the threshold of the morgue and got a glimpse of the great American calamity, the greatest American calamity of our times, at least, the part of East Conemaugh serving bread and butter, was closed for the night.

"The money—here it is—Black Mike, is out—on the rock—in the snow, Black Mike, with a wild cry, as the runners struck the frozen surface, Mike laughed loudly. As the runners struck the frozen surface, the bluff of the mountain was very steep. He remembered only dimly what followed Dave could never after-
