Miss Ralston—then Jack and Miss Retlaw; next morning, on coming back from the post-chaise, the admiral shouted, "Jack!" Immediately after the accident Jack—\\n
It was a glorious night; the roads were all in splendor, the horses fresh and mettlesome. No one thought of stopping, but the coach continued to race ahead. The couple in front seemed in very high spirits, the young man and girl talking and laughing with each other. It was a delightful drive, and the two enjoyed it immensely.

The sky was blue and clear, and the moon was shining brightly. The road was smooth and well-maintained, and the horses ran at a good pace. The coachman was expert, and the journey was a pleasure.

They arrived at the garrison at midnight, and the young man and girl were taken to their quarters. The next day, they continued their journey, and the next day after that. Jack and Miss Ralston were one of the most bachelors, Mrs. Lyston, the young lady, said, as she took a farewell of them, "Good-bye, you two!" And they added, addressing the mess in general, "We trust you have all had good fortune for us!"

The words came from her slowly and deliberately, as if she were about to say something very important.

"Good-bye!" she said, "And may we have a happy journey and a good fortune!"

"Good-bye!" answer the men, "And may we have a happy journey and a good fortune!"

They both said the same thing in unison, as if it were something they had been practicing for a long time.

Miss Ralston spoke in a sarcastic manner, going on with her speech, "I do not think we shall have a happy journey."

"Why not?" asked Jack, "Do you think we shall have a happy journey?"

"I do not think so," answered Miss Ralston, "I think we shall have a sad journey."

John A. Goodwin.

For the benefit of owners of real property, the amount of property has to be assessed for taxation in the year 1878.

For a day or so, boards and guards are put on the road which are afterward taken off and put back again, and the whole mess with water from the gutter, the gravel, and mud, is all taken away. Then the road is swept through a sea of mud. This is a deplorable scene, and the description of the roads of France, Les Routes Nattionales, of how the roads are mended in France, and the magnificent avenues of poplars in the towns, with its distance in kilometres, is given two hours rest at noon.
