A WILD SIDE

The experience of an excursionist is never so thrilling as when for the first time he has an opportunity of observing the living, the active animals which fill the world. The excursionist who has not seen a tiger, a rhinoceros, or a crocodile, has never seen any but the pictures of them, and even they are not wonderful. The animal world is held in the iron grip of the camera, and the bystander is not allowed to see the animality, the nature, of the animal, save by the intermediary of the machine. But the excursionist who has made the acquaintance of a tiger, a crocodile, or a rhinoceros, has seen these animals as they are, and not merely as they are to be seen, and can judge of their prowess and strength. The excursionist who has seen a tiger, a rhinoceros, or a crocodile, has seen these animals as they are, and not merely as they are to be seen, and can judge of their prowess and strength.

When the excursionist first saw a tiger, he saw a large cat, which was nothing more than a large cat, and he could not believe that it was a tiger, or that it was a cat at all. But when the excursionist first saw a tiger, he saw a tiger, and he knew that it was a tiger, and he knew that it was a cat, and he knew that it was a cat.
