"Miss Aura," he said gravely, "will you take me into your confidence this evening?"

"Dear Mr. Jenkins, I've got something to tell you," Philip told the womanly Mrs. Harman, "and it is about Aura."

"What can it mean?" Philip asked the motherly Mrs. Harman. "What’s the matter with Aura?"

"I don’t know what it is," stammered Aura, "but I thought..."

"I thought," said Mrs. Harman, "that you were going to write a letter."

"Yes, Miss Harman, you know, when he was here."

"Then, are you going to write it?"

"Yes, Miss Harman, of course."

"Can’t stay any longer now," said Philip. "When the service is over, we’ll go to..."

"I don’t want to stay any longer," Philip told the womanly Mrs. Harman. "I’ll go to Aura’s."

"You are not very talkative to-night."

"I don’t think," said Philip, "that age one’s self-confidence quickly.
