The Decline in Wheat Production.

From the Minneapolis Tribune.

While the decline in the wheat crop is not yet so marked as to cause alarm, the situation is by no means encouraging. Several agricultural writers are predicting a future that will be characterized by a period of scarcity. They point out that the growing shortage of food stuffs, coupled with the increased demand for wheat, will lead to a rapid rise in prices. The present situation is not without its problems, and the government is being called upon to take action to stabilize the market.
