A CHRISTMAS STORY.

Afternoon at Every House.

By Margaret Lee.

There was no boy in the village whose name was not in the Misses Horning's visit list. It was a happy list, for each child had seen and liked it. It was a long list, too, for Misses Horning were known to be most liberal in their gifts. The children had known this for some time, for they had heard it said that Misses Horning were kind to all. And yet, when the children looked into the market basket, they could not help noticing that there were not enough to go around. They could not help wishing that there were more. But they knew that they were not to look for more. It was not right to ask for more. Mr. W. had taught them that it was not right to ask for more. He had taught them to be content with what they had. And so they went on, content with what they had, and hoping for more.

And so they went on, content with what they had, and hoping for more.

From the various restaurants in the market, the children went home, each with his bag full of food. They were happy, for they knew that they would have something good to eat that night. They were proud, too, for they knew that they had earned their food. They were content, for they knew that they had everything that they needed.

The children went to bed early, for they were tired. They were happy, for they knew that they would have something good to eat that night. They were proud, too, for they knew that they had earned their food. They were content, for they knew that they had everything that they needed.

The next day was Sunday. The children went to church, and then they went to the market. They saw the Misses Horning's basket, and they were happy, for they knew that they would have something good to eat that night. They were proud, too, for they knew that they had earned their food. They were content, for they knew that they had everything that they needed.

STEAM ChIPING & HEATING.

The simplicity of steam in comparison with the OLD METHOD OF HEATING cannot be overestimated, for twice as much heat can be obtained from the same amount of fuel than can be had from the old way of steaming. There are very important reasons to be assigned for the wide adoption of steam heating, for not only can the cost of fuel be a great saving, but in the long run steam heating will prove a far better economy as a result of the greater comfort it produces.

If you do, you are heading directly towards your line of business, and so wait your order. We can supply you with just what you want, guarantee satisfaction, and give you full worth of your money. We have supplied a number of Steam Heaters in every instance our work has proved satisfactory. Call or write us.
