In a SQUALL.

On the plains of Thompson's Head, at the Highlands of Scotland, a storm came sweeping rapidly away from her bows. It was one of those terrific tempests that for a moment stifle all sense and reasoning. The tempest had cut a sudden and desolate way into the midst of confusion and storms, and was now tearing its way through the incredible darkness. The clouds were so dense that the sky was invisible, and the world was wrapped in a blackness that seemed to go on forever.

The storm was coming in from the south, and its approach was accompanied by a great rushing noise. The sky was dark and heavy, and the wind was howling with a fury that seemed to tear the very heavens apart. The clouds were rolling in like a great wave, and the lightning struck the ground with a force that seemed to shake the very earth.

In the midst of this tempest, there was a little boat that was struggling to make its way through the storm. The sailors on board were doing their best to keep the ship upright, but the wind was so strong that it seemed as if they would never be able to reach shore. The waves were crashing against the ship, and the crew were doing their best to hold on.

In the midst of this storm, there was a little girl who was standing on the deck of the ship. She was looking out at the sea, and she was wondering if she would ever be able to reach shore. The storm was so fierce that she could barely see anything, and the wind was howling in her ears.

As the storm passed, the sky cleared, and the sailors were able to make their way through the tempest. The girl was overjoyed, and she smiled at the thought of being able to reach shore. The storm had been a terrifying experience, but she was grateful to be alive.

The storm had passed, and the sailors were able to make their way to shore. The girl was overjoyed, and she was grateful to be alive. She had been through a great tempest, but she had come out the other side.

Washington, D.C., April 17, 1884.

Will the Democratic convention choose Cleve­land, in the interest of the party and the country? The same question has been asked in Cleveland for a score of years. It has been asked for the last twenty years, and the answer is the same. Cleve­land is the only choice. The fact that he is not popular in the West, and that he has never been the choice of the convention, is only a reason why he should be chosen. The reason is that he is the man the country needs. He is the man who can save the country from the danger of another civil war. He is the man who can save the country from the danger of another revolution. He is the man who can save the country from the danger of another civil war.
