HOLLOWAY HOUSE.

Luther Severn snored loud from the foot which had been buried by the footboard of the bed. His head was heavy. The sheet was soft. The pillow was comfortable. He felt no need to move. The room was warm and dark. The window was closed. The curtains were drawn. He was content to lie there for hours, perhaps days. But the old building creaked and groaned with every movement. The floor beneath him was not steady. The walls were not firm. He felt a sudden terror. What if he should fall? What if he should be crushed by the weight of those floors? What if he should be buried alive? He struggled to sit up, but he could not move. The bed seemed to be holding him fast. He tried to call out, but he could not speak. He tried to shout, but no sound came. He tried to help himself, but he could not. He was doomed. He was buried alive. He was going to die. He was going to die.

The next morning, contrary to his estimate of the value of our orange groves, the result of Miss Dubbeldam and the Obdam from 1875 to 1890 was 4,000 boxes a year, worth $6,000.

The next annual election, when he was completed his course in college very competently, was to be most prevalent,—

Of the big years, politically.

For a number of years past, Mr. Taggart, Secretary of Pennsylvania from Montgomery county, has been well known as a man of great exercising power and great capacity for holding the South solid and carrying it afloat. He has, in a large degree, been governed by the fact that the people of Pennsylvania are so largely influenced by the habits and the fads of the people of the South that they are apt to follow excessive taxation of the people of the South, and that it is unwise to attempt to release them from their obligations. His bad conscience as to the best way of meeting these obligations seems considerably infatuated by his bad conscience as to the best way of meeting these obligations.

In his subsequent attitude, his bad conscience as to the best way of meeting these obligations seems considerably infatuated by his bad conscience as to the best way of meeting these obligations.

PROVIDENCE INDEPENDENT

In this country 37,000 women find work in factories, and a number of them are suffering from the effects of over-work and ill health. One such case is that of Mrs. Jane Doe, who has worked in a textile factory for the past ten years. She has been unable to find work in other occupations, and her family is dependent on her earnings. She has been operated on for a heart condition, and the family is struggling to pay for the medical bills.

In another case, Mr. John Smith, a factory worker for fifteen years, has been diagnosed with a lung ailment. He has been forced to take a temporary leave from work to receive treatment, and his family is facing financial difficulties.

The workers are calling for improved workplace conditions and better health care for factory workers. They are demanding better pay and benefits, and an end to the exploitation of women and men in the workplace.

POINTEO AND PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS.
The mayor of the town of X said he had saved the life of a man who had been sentenced to death for murder. The man was brought before the judge and asked for a new trial, but the judge refused. The mayor then presented the man with a bottle of water and a piece of bread, which he ate. The man thanked the mayor and said he would do everything in his power to repay him. The mayor replied that the man had done enough to repay him by saving his own life.

The Department of Agriculture.

A county fair was held in the town of Y. The fair was attended by hundreds of people, who came to see the exhibits and to enjoy the food and entertainment. Many of the exhibits were won by the children and were displayed in the children's section. The fair was a great success and was enjoyed by all.
