WASHINGTON LETTER.

From the Republican Convention.

The third week of Congress has been the most interesting of the session. In both Houses of Congress there has been greater interest and excitement than has characterized the debates of previous weeks. The Senate has been crowded with delegates and spectators, and the House of Representatives has been filled to its capacity. The result was that no measure was passed, and the session was suspended until the fourth week.

The President's Message.

The President's Message to Congress was received by the House of Representatives on Monday, and it was read by Mr. Davis, the Speaker. The message contained three articles, each being a statement of the policies which the President intended to pursue during the remainder of the session. The first article was a statement of the policies which the President intended to pursue during the remainder of the session. The second article was a statement of the policies which the President intended to pursue during the remainder of the session. The third article was a statement of the policies which the President intended to pursue during the remainder of the session.

The Message was received with enthusiasm by the Senate, and it was referred to the Committee on the Whole for Consideration. It is expected that the Senate will report the message to the House of Representatives on Tuesday, and that the House will pass it without amendment.

Later the animal reared and plunged, from front gate to back door, from the care of the bank where she had made her deposits. She placed her money in the vault, and took her seat in the bank board room, where she had been invited to make her call. The bank officer, observing her unusual behavior, asked her if she was going to make a large deposit. She replied, "Yes, I am going to make my deposit, but I am also going to make a large withdrawal." The officer was surprised and asked, "What is the reason for the withdrawal?" She answered, "I am going to make a large deposit, but I am also going to make a large withdrawal." The officer was even more surprised and asked, "Why are you making both a deposit and a withdrawal?" She replied, "I am going to make a large deposit, but I am also going to make a large withdrawal."
