A Daughter of the Cavaliers.

By MARY H. BARKER.

The Coyle's were spending the holidays at a neighboring resort, and the family was in a state of no little excitement. The eldest daughter of the household was just returning from a trip to the mountains, and the news that she had brought was that the Coyle's had been invited to a social gathering at the home of a rich and influential family. The eldest daughter was the only one of the family who was old enough to attend such events, and she was overjoyed at the prospect of attending the gathering. The family was excited at the news, and the eldest daughter was determined to make the best impression possible.

There was another reason, too, for the family's excitement. The eldest daughter was just about to announce her engagement to a wealthy and prominent young man, and the family was eager to see how he would react to the news. The eldest daughter was determined to make a good impression on the family, and she was overjoyed at the prospect of attending the gathering. The family was excited at the news, and the eldest daughter was determined to make the best impression possible.

The increase in the price of coal and the decrease in the price of food has meant a big increase in the purchasing power of the average consumer in the present year. A good many factories, both in the North and South, have been reporting a greater demand for workmen than at any time in the past year. The Weather Prognosticators. From the local offices came reports of a general increase in the demand for coal, and of a decrease in the demand for food, which led to an increase in the purchasing power of the average consumer. A good many factories, both in the North and South, have been reporting a greater demand for workmen than at any time in the past year.

The Mountain Alliance. The reports from the local offices were uniformly favorable. The demand for coal was increasing, and the demand for food was decreasing, which meant a greater purchasing power for the average consumer.
