JOHN O. ZIMMERMAN,

TRAPPE, PA. Will take work at home, or can be conveyed to and from Collegeville Station.

It was getting dark when Paul came out of the cabin at Flag Rock. He had been to the fields to try to hunt something, and he had not brought in anything. He had been very eager to come into the forest, and he had wandered on and on toward the north, but he had turned back again. He had seen nothing except the trees and the mountains, and the sun had set in the west. The night was cold and clear, and the stars shone bright and wide.

He did not look again for fully five minutes, but then he heard a footfall behind him, and as it came on he turned his head. The man was a stranger, and he had never seen him before. In fact, he did not know what to do. But then he saw that the man was a squaw.

"It was getting dusk when Paul came out of the cabin at Flag Rock. He had been to the fields to try to hunt something, and he had not brought in anything. He had been very eager to come into the forest, and he had wandered on and on toward the north, but he had turned back again. He had seen nothing except the trees and the mountains, and the sun had set in the west. The night was cold and clear, and the stars shone bright and wide."
views on this point are summed up in a third of a cent on refined sugar. His position on the question of sound money and the national debt made him the center of attention at the reform meeting, which was held in Madison Square. His eloquence and force of personality enabled him to hold the audience in thrall, and his views were received with hearty approval. He believes in enlarging our markets, and he advocated a system of free trade as the best means of promoting our prosperity. He declared that, if the actual natural resources of the country were developed and utilized, the wealth of the nation would be increased beyond all anticipation. He was convinced of the necessity of a strong national government, and he spoke in favor of a reorganization of the executive department. He was a firm believer in the principle of economy, and he advocated the abolition of unnecessary expenditures. He was a friend of education, and he urged the establishment of a national university. He was a defender of the common man, and he advocated the extension of the franchise to all citizens who were capable of responsible citizenship. He was a disciple of Jefferson, and he regarded his administration as the model for a great national government. His views on these subjects were set forth in a series of speeches, which were widely read and discussed. His last speech was given at the closing session of the convention, and it was attended by a large assemblage. He died soon after, but his ideas and principles lived on, and they were carried forward by his devoted followers. His son, the late President, continued the work of his father, and he was a great advocate of the principles of sound money and free trade. He was a great friend of the people, and he was loved and respected by all who knew him. The work of the late President is plain and explicit. He was a man of high character, and he was a great benefactor of mankind.
