There was a fight described in Paul's journal, and, in spite of the fact that the country was in a state of unrest, it came to pass that the entire village had gathered around the spot where the incident occurred. The people were not only interested in the outcome of the affair, but they were anxious to hear what Paul had to say about the matter. The old man who had been wounded laid there, his life hanging in the balance. Paul did all he could to alleviate his sufferings and to soothe him until help arrived. The crowd scattered when the news of the accident spread, but Paul remained behind to look after the injured man. He was soon joined by the police, who arrested the man who had started the fight.

The following day, Paul went to the police station to give evidence. He was questioned by the officer in charge, who seemed to be quite interested in what he had to say. Paul told him that he had been present at the scene of the accident and that he had seen the man who had started the fight.

"What did you do?" asked the officer.

"I did nothing," replied Paul. "I just saw what was happening and tried to stop it."}

"And how did it happen?"

"I don't know," answered Paul. "I just saw the man start to fight and tried to stop him."

The officer seemed to be satisfied with this answer, and he thanked Paul for his services.

"I'll do my best to find out what happened," he said. "You've been very helpful, Paul."
