A Question for Workmen, from the New Orleans Press:

Says a correspondent in the New York Tribune: "It is almost certain that the President of the United States will be a Democrat in 1896, and the question now is, who the candidate will be?"

If the President's latest national convention at St. Louis is followed by similar ones in other parts of the country, it appears likely that the President will be nominated by a Democratic convention in 1896.

The President's latest national convention at St. Louis was held in June and July, and it is said that the President was present at the convention, as well as other prominent Democrats.
