WAITED TWO WEEKS LONGER

By H. M. EGBERT

(Copyright by W. G. Chapman.)
SOME men at the club had brought up the old problem of wife versus mother. Which should a man save, if he were struggling with them in the water? Then it was that Merrill told the story:

"Sothey had been out boating with his fiancée, Evelyn, and her little crippled sister, Mollie," he said. "I think that problem was still harder. Ordinarily, of course, his duty would have been to save his fiancée. Mollie was lame—had been so from birth. She could walk, after a fashion, but she couldn't have swam, and she was far too frail and delicate to swim for her life in such a tide as Eight-Mile race.

"He knew Evelyn could swim like a fish, too. The girls were staying at North Cliff when he called to see them. He had met Evelyn a few weeks before, in town. He knew she and her sister were orphans. They had hardly a relative in the world. Sothey had become engaged a week or two before, and he was madly in love with Evelyn, and the envy of all the other men who admired her dashing beauty.

"I think his predicament was worse. It was about half a mile to the land, and Evelyn could probably have made it. Mollie was helpless. Sothey did not know what to do. He acted on impulse. He saved Mollie.

"He never knew how the boat had overturned. He was trying to bring the tiller around and let the boom go when they found themselves in the water, and clinging to the overturned boat, which was drifting rapidly out to sea.

"He saw Evelyn struggling beside him, and Mollie sinking. Quick as a flash Sothey grabbed Mollie by the hair. He lost sight of Evelyn. He knew he could not save both girls, and he could not let Mollie go. Alternately swimming and treading water, he managed, in utter exhaustion, to get Mollie ashore. Then he fainted.

"He awakened in a fisherman's cottage. Mollie was upstairs and doing well. The next day he saw her. He had not dared to ask about his fiancée; everybody knew she was drowned. To his astonishment Mollie seemed almost unconcerned.

"It was a tiny fishing village, and the tragedy, though it stirred the place, was not widely reported. After Mollie and he had recovered the girl gave up the little cottage and went home.

"You must let me come and see you, for Evelyn's sake," said Sothey. "He was rather astonished when Mollie resolutely refused. 'I hear you no ill will, Jack, and I owe you my life,' she said. 'But I feel that it would be impossible after what has happened.'

"The girl's uncanny calmness shocked John. However, there was nothing to do but acquiesce. It was a year before he saw Mollie again. They met on Fifth Avenue, and the recognition was mutual. Mollie told Jack Sothey that she was living with an old aunt in an apartment uptown.

"That had been a hard period for Sothey. He knew that the shadow over his life would deepen rather than disappear, as the years went on. And yet, strangely enough, he began to realize that he had not truly loved Evelyn. Their meeting and engagement had been rapid, and there had been no communion of tastes between them. It had been infatuation, and, in spite of the tragedy, Jack thought of Evelyn as an episode in his life, rather than his lost love.

"When he looked at Mollie he was conscious of a sudden awakening of interest in the frail girl, whose beauty had developed until she seemed a replica of Evelyn—less dashing, less vivacious, but the Evelyn whom he would have loved rather than the one he had known.

"I am coming to see you, Mollie," he said. And this time the girl did not refuse.

"Weeks passed. Their intimacy deepened. The girl was becoming very dear to Sothey. At last the day arrived when he felt that the shadow which hung over them ought to be lifted.

"Mollie," he said, taking the girl's hands in his. "I want to tell you, dear, that I love you. I want to ask you to be my wife. I feel that you and I have something inseparable, something that makes our lives one. It is Evelyn, and yet I never cared for Evelyn as I love you."

"The girl looked at him, and then, to Sothey's amazement, she burst into passionate weeping.

"I can never marry you, Jack," she cried. "You do not know—Oh, you do not know, and I cannot bring myself to tell you."

"But you love me, Mollie? he cried. "He took her in his arms, and for an instant her head lay on his shoulder.

"Yes, I love you," she said. "But I cannot marry you." She raised her head and looked him frankly in the eyes. "Listen, Jack," she said. "I have loved you since I first saw you, and I have never loved anyone else. That is why I must send you away. It is because of Evelyn."

"He could find no answer to make. He bowed his head and went away. It was another year before he saw Mollie again. Then he was at Atlantic City.

"He was seated in a secluded corner by the Boardwalk when he saw Mollie coming toward him. At first he thought, so striking was the resemblance, that she was Evelyn herself. Then, as he watched her, he saw Evelyn in the flesh, at her side, and, beside Evelyn a man.

"The trio were advancing toward him, and Evelyn and the man were engaged in an animated conversation. Evelyn had grown stouter and fleshier; she was still the dashing beauty of old times, but the dashingness could not carry itself so well under that accumulated load of flesh. It was overdone, and the woman was obviously too artificial. The hair was too light, the eyes too dark. Sothey stared. He could not be mistaken. It was Evelyn.

"Sothey was not superstitious. He knew that Evelyn was at Mollie's side, and he rose and followed them to their hotel. He watched them enter, and all that day he waited until he was rewarded at last by seeing Mollie come out alone. She walked with her umping gait, along the boardwalk until she came to the same place where Sothey had sat that morning. There she sat down, and there he accosted her.

"The terror in the girl's eyes almost unnerved him. She glanced at him fearfully, and saw that he knew all. "You have seen her?" she cried, with a quick intake of breath.

"Sothey nodded. "Tell me the truth, Mollie," he said, taking her hand in his. And he knew then that, although it was not the same Evelyn whom he had loved, it was just the same Mollie who had been so dear to him, who had always been in his thoughts, night and day, since he had learned to love her.

"She is not dead," said Sothey. "But—Mollie, tell me the truth, and trust me."

"Yes, I will tell you the truth," answered the girl. "When you became engaged to Evelyn you looked on it as a serious matter. But to Evelyn it was just a joke, a summer flirtation. She gets engaged at least two or three times every summer. When you looked on it as something lasting Evelyn was well, just plain scared. She liked you well enough to become engaged to you, but she never loved you, Jack. Why, Evelyn couldn't love behind the rocks. She is engaged to now is rich, and she will probably marry him; but she never intended to marry you."

"You frightened her, Jack, and because she really did care for you in a way, she was afraid that she might not be able to help marrying you. And you were not a rich man, not rich enough for Evelyn. I didn't know what she was going to do, but I knew that she was planning to do something, because she was mad with fear when you came down to North Cliff."

"You know she can swim. She told me afterwards—she sent me a letter while I was in the fisherman's house, where you came up to see me. She had upset the boat, knowing that you would take care of me, because I could not swim. When the boat upset Evelyn dived and climbed out and hid behind the rocks. She waited there until she saw that we were safe, and then she ran home and changed her dress, packed up and ran away. That was to prevent your knowing that she was alive. She wanted you to think her dead, so as to escape marrying you."

"And you knew all that, Mollie? And that was why you forbade me to see you?"

"Yes," cried the girl. "And when I was living with my aunt I could see you, because Evelyn had gone West. But I dared not let you love me."

"But I have always loved you, Mollie," said Jack. "I love you now, dear."

"He took her in his arms and kissed her. And this time they knew that there was no obstacle to their happiness.

"Jack, dear," said Mollie presently, "if Evelyn marries that man they will go West to live. You won't want to see her again. Can you wait two weeks longer until I send for you to come to me?"

"He laughed. "I have waited two years, Mollie," he answered. "I think I can wait two weeks longer—for you, not Evelyn."

Fashion Has Put Ban on Belief in Ghosts

There was once a time when ghosts were the fashion. Now the influence of the ghost, especially the vampire ghost, is becoming weaker and weaker everywhere. Scotland and Ireland, two countries that once supplied the entire world with them, have seen a distinct lessening in their exports, says Paul Morland in Vanity Fair.

The beautiful day of the Gothic castles, a la Walter Scott, is no more. Ghosts, reactionary by nature, have left Germany in the wake of the landed nobility—in spite of the immense and fictitious exploitation that was made of ghostly chronicles by the German cinema.

And if in the United States one should hear once more the clinking of chains in the middle of the night one might be quite sure that it was not caused by any specter, but by a flivver returning home late at night.

What's the Use?
Uncle—You should work and earn money.
Boy—But what do I want with money?
Uncle—Why, save it and be independent and then you won't have to work.
Boy—But I don't have to work now.

Book Lovers Do
I have somewhere seen it observed, that we should make the same use of a book that the bee does of a flower; she steals sweets from it, but does not injure it.—Colton.

Number of Known Colors
Aubert estimated the solar spectrum to contain about 1,000 distinguishable hues, from which, according to Rood, 2,000,000 tints and shades can be derived.

Watches Need Oil
Watches, like automobiles, develop most of their trouble from lack of lubrication, according to a jeweler. "No one would think of running his car without greasing it at least occasionally," he said. "Although a watch needs only a fraction of a drop where a car needs a gallon of oil, the principle is the same. Most of our repair jobs are from watches that have run so long that the bearings have become dry and worn. A good watch ought to be inspected, cleaned and oiled once a year or at least every 18 months. Some small women's watches should have attention oftener."

True Politeness
Ceremonies are different in every country, but true politeness is everywhere the same. Ceremonies, which take up so much of our attention, are only artificial helps which ignorance assumes in order to imitate politeness, which is the result of good sense and good nature. A person possessed of these qualities, though he had never seen a court, is truly agreeable; and if without them, would continue a clown, though he had been all his life a gentleman usher.—Goldsmith, in "The Citizen of the World."

Not That Kind of Flash
Mr. Nag—I hear that Mrs. Naylor took a bottle with her when she went to have dinner at the Straightplaces.
Mrs. Nag—Is that possible? How shocking?
Mr. Nag—Not so bad as it sounds. She had to have something to feed her baby with, didn't she?

Your Telephone

The Private Branch Exchange spells the highest development of the telephone user's equipment

OF STANDARD DESIGN only in its simplest forms, it varies from a small board with a handful of telephones to a great complicated switchboard large enough to serve a city of fifty thousand people.

Its reach must be universal—across the office and across the country.

Its flexibility must react to the peculiar and changing requirements of the establishment employing it.

Its pitch must respond to every note of service struck by the ten or ten thousand who use it.

Specialized equipment, plus, it is an example of the increasing accomplishment of the telephone—to speed and facilitate, to make the hard job easy.
