Home Each Week

It was lonely on the farm now that winter had settled in. Mrs. Kemp would sometimes catch herself listening for footsteps. But no one came.

Tom was back at his job in town. Jim was in college. And Sue, with her children, couldn't come home very often.

Then one evening the telephone rang. It was Jim. "Just wanted to chat," he told his Mother. "How're you and Dad?"

For several minutes family news and happy confidences flew back and forth between mother and son.

The conversation ended, Mrs. Kemp turned from the telephone with eyes shining. "Dad," she exclaimed, "Jim gave me an idea! Let's call up Tom and Sue. From now on I'm going to visit the children by telephone and not sit here alone!"

The Story of a Music Master

By FANNIE HURST

(By McClure Newspaper Syndicate) (WNU Service)

LIVING in the machine-age should in some measure have prepared the director for what was coming; hundreds of the more astute had seen it in the offing for years, before it actually happened, and in many instances had run for the cover of kindred professions or occupations.

Klinger, however, had stuck, as the saying goes, like a captain to a sinking ship, until the inundation of "canned music" was something that even his stubborn kind of resistance had to reckon with.

No doubt about it, the day of the theater and moving picture orchestra was gone. A man had not a chance to earn any sort of decent living for himself and family, if he depended upon a profession that had literally died in his tracks.

In vain the perishing vocation fought for its life. An organization was formed, of which Klinger was vice president, to combat, by newspaper and magazine advertising, this dense of an honorable profession.

DO NOT PERMIT CANNED MUSIC TO BE SERVED UP TO YOU. THE BEST IS NONE TOO GOOD. PUBLIC, DEMAND YOUR RIGHTS!

Of course the public did nothing of the sort, the sound-screen became its own orchestral effect, orchestras died out of the theater, and at fifty-seven, Otto Klinger, for thirty years director of an orchestra in one of the city's largest temples of entertainment, found himself, incredible as it might seem, out of a job.

There was the alternative, desperately clutched by so many of his men, of rushing to the picture studios of California, but even had such an opportunity presented itself, Klinger was not the man to subject his dignity to any such flagellation as that.

Playing on a motion picture lot! Otto Klinger, graduate of a Berlin conservatory of music, one-time concertmeister of a Nurnberg orchestra and now, for thirty years, director of an aggregation of thirty men, going Hollywood. Never!

Fortunately, it was at a time of his life when his family, containing grown sons and daughters, had agreed among themselves it was best for him to retire.

Rearing three girls and three boys on a scale of decent and substantial living had, of course, not enabled Otto to accumulate, but when the catastrophe of the dissolution of his orchestra came along, there were fortunately, three out of his six children who were earning. Ermin and Max, the two elder boys, steady and showing the results of the spartan rearing that had been theirs, were both draughtsmen drawing substantial wage. Mathilde, the third, daughter, a staid, careful, uncoquettish girl, who so far as the modern flapper was concerned, did not exist at all, was confidential secretary to the German consul.

So, all in all, while in the heart of Otto calamity had descended, his family, including his wife, was of an opinion, secret from him, that considering his age and worthy constitution, it was just as well for him to retire.

The Klingers owned their little home on the outskirts of New York. There were only three children left at a school age. Mrs. Klinger, twenty years younger than her husband, and of firm heroic build, was a housewife of impeccable and amazing capacity for economy.

The Klingers could make out all right.

But the effect upon the morale of Klinger was what troubled them. Prepared as the family was for the let-down that inevitably must take place in the somewhat Bismarkian figure of their father, who for thirty years had ruled thirty men, to say nothing of a household, the actual happening was nothing short of appalling.

He became a household tyrant, dominating over the daily routine, interfering in his wife's capable regime, exercising even more discipline with his children.

There came a time, in that little home, when so far as the members of it were concerned, the idea of sending Otto off to a private hospital at some quiet seaside resort actually began to present itself.

That project never took form. The Klingers were too compact a group for that; too grounded in certain rudiments of family solidity, but it does go to show the extremes to which they were pushed, by the overflow of their father's chagrin into the household.

Then Bertha, the fourth child, hit on a scheme that, while it was to increase the household tyranny in many ways, was nothing short of stroke-of-genius.

Secretly, so that not even his wife or children knew it, there had always smoldered in Otto bitter disappointment that not one of his children had followed in his musical footsteps. They were a practical, sensible lot, youngsters any parent could be proud of, and for that matter each and every one of them had a musical education.

Systematic Hunt for Priceless Old Papers

Quit recently a London workman was cutting out a piece of old parchment into segments for making into a lamp shade when he noticed some old and faded writing on the piece he had cut. A close examination revealed the parchment to be a deed of the year 1480. He was a valuable old document that should have been preserved in a museum being ruthlessly cut up to gratify the passing whim of fashion, and when it had served its purpose to be cast aside on a dust heap, a loss to history and the severing perhaps of a valuable link with the past.

Hundreds of priceless old documents are being cut up in this way, but thanks to that distinguished scholar and antiquarian, Mr. William le Hardy, a public appeal has been made to end this needless sacrifice of historical documents to the scrap heap. He is asking to be allowed to examine the archives of old-established solicitors' offices in London, where many of these old documents are to be found, in the hopes of discovering deeds that will throw some light on the history of some famous county families. One firm has already given Mr. William le Hardy permission to go through their archives, with the result that many important facts concerning the histories of ancient manors have been revealed.—London Mail.

But among them, with the exception of Edith, who was too young to reckon with, not one of the girls or boys had exhibited outstanding musical talent.

Bertha's idea, however, was founded on this rather casual musical equipment of the family.

Father must form a family orchestra and they could practice evenings. Mother at the piano, the three boys at the violin, flute and viola, respectively, Bertha and Mathilde at the harp and cello and little Edith, who was now eight and taking her first lessons, at the violin.

Well, somehow, the idea caught with Klinger like wildfire, and catching, did some tantalizing things to family life, curtailing the outside activities of the grown boys and girls to such an extent that their souls or their evenings could no longer be called their own.

Bad as was the evening after evening practicing of the group, under the surveillance of Klinger, it was offset by the fact that once more clenched by an interest, something of the old good humor, and normal geniality of the man revived.

Life in the Klinger household was once more livable, as the Klingers put it.

And then there began to develop the aspect of it all that made the idea of Bertha seem to blossom into something that was nothing short of genius.

Time and time again, conducting this little group of his family orchestra, Klinger began to find himself amazed and delighted by the musical precocity of the mite of a girl playing the third violin.

Within two months, trying to keep down within himself the rising hope and the rising excitement that began in this child was talent, he saw the thin little wisp of a girl succeeding her delighted first violinist brother, playing in his place.

Six months later, by arrangement made by Klinger, Edith was taken to the conservatory, there to play before the great Eichey who pronounced her of outstanding and amazing virtuosity.

That busted up the Klinger orchestra, so to speak.

Six hours of each day, Klinger, who has no more time for his family orchestra, interested in his fingertips, tender of her youth, admiring of her talent, teaches his youngest, and plans for her musical future.

Home Each Week

It was lonely on the farm now that winter had settled in. Mrs. Kemp would sometimes catch herself listening for footsteps. But no one came.

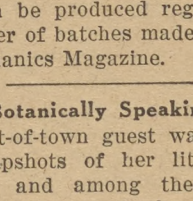

Tom was back at his job in town. Jim was in college. And Sue, with her children, couldn't come home very often.

Then one evening the telephone rang. It was Jim. "Just wanted to chat," he told his Mother. "How're you and Dad?"

For several minutes family news and happy confidences flew back and forth between mother and son.

The conversation ended, Mrs. Kemp turned from the telephone with eyes shining. "Dad," she exclaimed, "Jim gave me an idea! Let's call up Tom and Sue. From now on I'm going to visit the children by telephone and not sit here alone!"
