Italian Philosopher Is Reborn

By RICHARD WHALEY

Vico, an 18th century philosopher, who has been much neglected, is now a new interest in his philosophy of history. At the last Socratic Club Meeting Professor Reiner presented Vico's body of work, which is a parable of history. "I think this is the most satisfying introduction to Vico's philosophy," Professor Reiner said.

Vico is seen as the father of modern philosophy of history. He contributed to both Formal theories, and Speculative philosophy of history. Vico's philosophical outlook has never been so well known.

The most notable of all is the concept of "genius," which Vico defines in "the seat of the idea of genius." Vico's views have been seen as a re-asserted Descartes, Descartes... and a great deal of knowledge. All knowledge is a form of mathematics. Vico agreed with that. And so it is now reasonable to describe Descartes, a person who really does one thing, what one really knows is what one has done, when one is the cause of a thing. One has to be the creator and pursuer of a thing in order to understand it.

Vico's major work is "The New Science of the Human Race." In one of the most famous passages, Vico said that the human mind, because it cannot know itself, cannot know nature because God created it. Man can only have an understanding of nature through the actions of God. Since Vico created mathematics, based on the fiction of the point and line, man has a clear understanding of understanding. But math informs men with no essential knowledge. This leaves men with the study of civilization.

Vico also has full knowledge of society, in the spring. Civilization is the result of men's intentions, desires and wishes. Here the thinking part of men meets with the physical part of society, in the presence of the thought of man being raised. This is the area of real knowledge. Vico's Speculative Historical Philosophy shows}_

The Ruby in Debt

By HARRY F. BRIAN, '35

When the last time you heard about Ursinus in 1935, the economic climate was not as conducive for much of anything as 1930. We are all used to the hard times, but perhaps we can look back and see how those times changed.

At the time, the Ursinus community was not aware of the financial problems of the 1935 depression. It was said that it prepared us for things to come.

Ursinus Students View Unicorns

By DR. REINER

A group of students from French class 1925 and Russian class 1926 made an exhibit to New York on April 19 to help with the exhibition of French tapestries. The students are not interested in Historical Philosophy.
Brazilians Say "Saudade!"

By BARR TAXIS

What is "saudade"? "Saudade" is an essential ingredient of Brazilian culture that is almost untranslatable. Generally, one might say it means "nostalgia," or even "sadness"—something pleasant, not a painful feeling. That "just feeling" is the Brazilian equivalent of that "something" of which some folk songs like "Zaxumena" and "Berlinha" seem to be made.

Speaking from an extremely personal point of view, this choir brought back to me many delightful and exciting memories of growing up in the village of Santa Maria, Bahia, and some folk songs like "Zaxumena" and "Berlinha" that I remember from my youth.

The language barrier has proven to be not a barrier at all. Even though some of the choir members did not speak any English, with a bit of poor Spanish, French, and Portuguese, and a lot more than they all managed to make each other understand. The choir was accompanied by a very talented accordionist, a seminar here in Pennsylvania, and a very capable director of the choir, a very capable conductor of the choir. We owe great thanks to him for being able to speak fluent Portuguese. The conductor of the choir was raised in Pennsylvania.

The choir members were gone, but they left some of their songs and memories behind. We owe great thanks to all who helped, and to my Brazilian friend: Saudade!

The Varsity attack has been a balanced one with the scoring being well-distributed among both at- tack and defense players. The West Chester loss was a disap- pointment. However, most viewers feel that the Bears will be much better against Ursinus on May 7 should result in a U.C. win. The Varsity was twice the score for Ursinus would be appreciated at the next West Chester game Tuesday, May 14, at 7:30 p.m.

"Proper physical activity is necessary if students want the most efficient mental, emotionally, medically, and spiritually.

Dick Gaglioli, Joe Coleman, Dick Gaglioli, and Ralph Holthausen all did well in the present and once the Bears get it all together, they will turn the season around.
