Jill Leauber Fills Vacancy

By RAE BLAKE
October 1 is truly "Election Day" at Ursinus College. Along with the choosing of officers by the Freshman Class, the position of Secretary of the USGA was also voted upon by members of the student body. The job was the result of a vacant warrant when Joy Keene transferred prior to the official start of her freshman year. Leauber, a sophomore English major, was elected to fill the position until the end of the academic year.

Extremely active in campus organization, she has done full work and is a member of the Lamplighter Staff, the Ursinus Dramatics Club, and the Senior Honor Society. Leauber and a group of students are planning a spring gala to raise money for the Danforth Foundation. She is also a member of the Women's Basketball Team, a member of the Board of Student Advisers and of the Student Assembly.

As part of its integration into Ursinus College, the Danforth Foundation held an election of officers on October 1, the first time application papers are being held, for single Fellows dates at several stages are often on November 19, 1975, anyone desiring to apply should contact the Foundation for further information. Application and processing of the scores. The Danforth Foundation is known for its integration into the community and for its activities which have included theairropping of funds and efforts to support the arts, culture, and education in the county. The Foundation also supports a variety of organizations and programs, including the Ursinus College community, which has been awarded its first fellowship.

"Ursinus Hosts Family Fete
By GRACE OLMEDA
Many parents and relatives came and only a few of these left before seeing and experiencing the various activities that were scheduled for the day.

At 3 p.m., the parents and relatives were welcomed by Mr. Frank Rabold, chairman of the Parents' Committee, as they arrived for the day. Following the football game, the family would be entertained in the classrooms of the Freshman dorms. They would be able to enjoy the activities of the students and the college community.

The Ursinus College community would like to offer a tribute to its parents and relatives, and to everyone who came to support the college.

The last thing that I wish to say is that we hope you enjoyed the day and that you will come back next year.

THE FACT . . . AFTER OR BEFORE

In all phases of life, there are certain situations which proceed reasonably well, but do not function in the manner which would be most desirable. Afterwards, their anti-climactic nature makes itself increasingly obvious with each moment of consideration. However, often despite this realization, people don't bother to make the needed corrections. Either an alteration does not seem that essential or the urgency of the matter is forgotten shortly after the situation is removed from the spotlight.

This judgment can be applied to a certain occurrence or to an overall attitude about an area. Personally, I feel that this is the case at Ursinus. The first may be less important merely because it is in the past. Yet the past repeats itself, and repetition, if it ensures without objection, cannot alwaysjustifiably be faulted.

Therefore, we should discuss specific instances and their remedies. The "certain occurrence" referred to was the graduation ceremony last year. Although most of it went reasonably well, it seemed unwiseful to confer the honorary degrees at the end of the graduation exercises. By that time, after listening to and applauding all those in the graduating class, there was little energy or enthusiasm left for those who were to be given special recognition. I'm sure the honors themselves were not deprecated in the eyes of those who received them, but at the same time, a change in program scheduling might be an improvement worth considering.

The second question, and one more worthy of careful thought and re-evaluation, concerns our college calendar. For several years, the students have expressed the desire for a different schedule, which would simplify the examinations before Christmas. They feel that a different schedule would be more profitable, they should be given a choice or at least the chance to choose. I'm afraid that this isn't an idea that the course is about. The performance would be video-recorded.

For the history majors and all others, this insight into some of Dr. Parsons' activities is quite helpful. It is hoped that the student body will participate in some of the planned events in order to appreciate the work Dr. Parsons has done. Moreover, it is important to recognize this man and his dedication to the cause of Ursinus College in so many different ways.

On New Year's Day, when you turn on the tube, you'll see a lot of college football being played. You'll see that the NCAA squads dream about, that the Buckeyes, the Orange Bowl, the Sugar Bowl (now played on New Year's Eve) are the major battles televised.

Penn State always seems to be a favorite to take the Rose. The Nittany Lions attract a lot of fans around this area. For years, State has been the powerhouse of the East, but this season every team in the Big Ten is strong. Right now though, they're ranked 10th in the country as they're reporting to Columbus. Greg Battistel, Archie Griffin and the Ohio State University team are in Columbus to play Ball State this Saturday. Explosive West Virginia looms as a tough cookie for the Buckeyes to crumble.

Coach Joe Paterno admits that his team is in a bit of a slump. The defense though is still like a brick wall withAli Forney and Greg Buttle. The Ohio State team is very balanced with QB John Andrus, RB Tim Oelem, and Ron Codere. The Buckeyes are currently ranked 22nd and I'd place them anywhere.

George McGinnis: $3 Million Man

BY ANDREW SCHWARTZ

Every knowledgeable basketball fan is now aware that George McGinnis will play for the Philadelphia 76ers this season. The story of how he became a 76er is an extremely interesting one.

George McGinnis was a high school basketball star in Indianapolis and then became an All-American at Indiana University. After his sophomore season at Indiana, in 1971, he left to join the Indiana Pacers of the American Basketball Association. Playing for the Pacers, he became an awesome, high-scoring and high rebounding forward. In 1973 the Baltimore Bullets carefully watched McGinnis carry the Pacers on his broad shoulders, claimed his N.B.A. rights in the draft.

Before last season George signed a Pacer contract with the option that he could purchase it for approximately $85,000, and therefore not be obligated to play in Indiana. He then went out and had his best season, leading the ABA in scoring and rebounding (29.8 points and 14.2 rebounds a game). He also shared the Most Valuable Player Award with Julius Erving.

The New York Nets became very interested in big George due to the Nets $1.8 million and a $500,000 bonus that was offered along with a six-year contract with the Knicks. George then carefully watched McGinnis carry the Pacers on his broad shoulders, claimed his N.B.A. rights in the draft.

When the contract was ruled unfair George McGinnis' agent, Irwin Weiner, went to Commissioner O'Brien's office on July 10. O'Brien had assured McGinnis that if he signed with Philadelphia, the 76ers would re- sign McGinnis more than $3 million dollars. "Philadelphia came up with an offer that I couldn't refuse and that's basically the reason why I'm here," said George. He signed a six-year, non-cut, non-tru option contract worth, according to Weiner, about three million dollars.

"His salary was guaranteed against any injury on or off the court. Under the terms of the contract the 76ers paid the Knicks a $500,000 bonus and also bought his Pacer contract. The contract that George signed with the 76ers satisfied his goal of security.

Even though this contract could put a strain on the Philadelphia Mint, it was well worth the price to have George McGinnis playing a center uniform. Besides more national exposure, the 76ers immediately became a contender for the play-offs with his signing. The general manager, Pat Williams, hadHammed

"Well, I feel excited," says big George. "We have good personnel (possibly the best pair of forwards in the league), a solid team and himself and excellent draft selections. I'll get some fine line for us to get to know each other and to jell. I think we're going to do a lot of talent."

Asked if there would be a scoring conflict between Cunningham and himself, George said, "We both have different products, and we could be very similar."

"Our key is to make a good team and possibly make the playoffs and we can work together and play well together. The key is to make a lot of talent."
